Some people wanted to see a comedy show, whereas others wanted to see Screech.

Manhattan residents Eric and Roni Deeds said they attended because they wanted to laugh.

"We're just here to see a good comedy show," Roni Deeds said, although she said she had seen "Saved by the Bell" before.

"I'm kind of embarrassed to admit it," she said.

"But my younger brother and sister used to watch it. I haven't seen him in any other movies or TV shows."

"Other cast members have gone on to do bigger and better things.

"Maybe he likes the live performance and getting instant feedback."

Some people attended the show because they had grown up watching "Saved by the Bell" and wanted to see a cast member.

"I'm excited to see him," said Tracy Lackner, sophomore in apparel marketing.

"I think he'll be funny. It's kind of neat that he's getting the college crowd. People can see a celebrity they usually don't get to see."

Diamond's raunchy humor surprised many in the audience.

"I figured it would be funny," Andy Pavkov, sophomore in finance, said.

"But it was a lot funnier than I thought. I figured a lot of it would be based on 'Saved by the Bell.' It was hilarious."

Justin Tomlinson, freshman in economics, said the show was different from what he expected and that it was funny.

Although Diamond plays in the band Salty the Pocketknife and is appearing in the upcoming David Spade movie "Dickie Roberts," he will probably always be known as the nerdy "Saved by the Bell" character.

Tomlinson said Diamond will be a successful comedian because of how famous he is.

"I think his fame will carry him through stand-up," he said.

"But if he was unknown, he's mediocre, at best."

"I think he makes more money signing autographs than doing stand-up."

Diamond sold photos and autographs after the show.

The event's emcee, Manhattan resident Austin Morgan, said Diamond was much better than he expected him to be.

However, when Morgan introduced Diamond to the audience, he was careful not to make any "Saved by the Bell" references.

"Other comics who have worked with him have said it's a pretty sensitive area," he said.

"It's something you don't want to do."

Writer sues Queen Latifah, claiming she had original idea for 'Bringing Down the House'

A New York lawyer who claims she had the original idea for the box-office hit "Bringing Down the House" filed a $15 million copyright lawsuit Friday against star Queen Latifah and the movie's other producers.

Marie Flaherty claims the movie is a rip-off of "Amoral Dilemma," a screenplay she wrote several years ago about a lawyer who meets a prisoner online, only to have the prisoner wreak havoc in his life.

Harry Potter fan buys unreleased, unprinted book in online auction

A Harry Potter fan has paid $8,000 for a signed copy of the latest, unreleased installment of the boy wizard's adventures.

The winner of the online auction Thursday took home nothing — the book he or she won is yet to be printed, let alone signed by author J.K. Rowling.

The British charity group Sense sparked frenzied bidding when it announced the sale of a copy of the long-awaited "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," the fifth book in the series.

Bids for the book, due out on June 21, started at $1.60 when the auction kicked off more than a week ago before quickly jumping to the closing price.

Buffalo Zoo wants MTV fraternity pledges charged with trespassing

The Buffalo Zoo has asked the district attorney to pursue charges against three college students videotaped by an MTV reality series inside the zoo after hours.

The students, Sigma Chi Omega pledges appearing on the MTV network's "Fraternity Life," could face criminal trespass charges, Clark said. The misdemeanor count carries a maximum jail term of 90 days.

In a recent episode of the show, pledges Tim Kukulka, Earl Altheide and Steve Paul were shown walking between the hyena and antelope exhibits after scaling a wall near a zoo entrance, zoo president Donna Fernandes said.

Reinforcements might deploy ahead of schedule

By Robert Burns
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon might send some reinforcements to Iraq sooner than scheduled, and the number of U.S. and allied forces in the Persian Gulf region now exceeds 290,000, officials said Saturday.

Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal told a news conference that part of the Army's 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment, from Fort Polk, La., might go earlier than originally planned, but he did not know when.

"There are discussions under way about potentially moving up part of its force to an earlier deployment," said McChrystal, vice director of operations for the Pentagon's Joint Staff.

The Pentagon never announced a deployment date for the 2nd Armored, but officials have said the unit was to begin arriving in the Gulf in early May. One official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said some of the unit's equipment may be airlifted to the Gulf ahead of schedule.

The 2nd Armored is a lighter force than traditional armored cavalry regiments. In fact it has no tanks.

Its heaviest vehicles are gun-mounted Humvee utility vehicles. The unit also has an aviation squadron.

McChrystal said recent news reports of 100,000 additional forces being deployed to Iraq may have given the mistaken impression that Gen. Tommy Franks, the war commander, decided after the battle began that he needed more ground troops.

The extra forces were in plans months ago, McChrystal said, and nothing that has happened on the battlefield thus far has changed the deployment plan, which he described as flexible.

He did not say why elements of the 2nd Armored might go early.

The other forces designated for future deployment are the 1st Cavalry Division from Fort Hood, Texas; the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Carson, Colo.; and the 1st Armored Division from Germany.

Of the 290,000 U.S. and British forces in the Gulf area, more than one-third are in Iraq, he said.

The troop total is 20,000 more than announced on Friday.

CHURCHES | Local churches express support for troops through prayer

one who isn't deeply troubled by all of this, regardless of their position. A person's faith, though, is an immediate resource to draw upon during times like this."

Churches are encouraging their congregations to be supportive. Immediately following the outbreak of war, several churches addressed the conflict.

R.C. McConnell, pastor at First Presbyterian Church, said the first Sunday service after the start of the war was dedicated to talking about the conflict.

More than a week into the war, churches and their congregations aren't turning a blind eye to the conflict.

McConnell said he is asking his congregation to keep the soldiers, their families, citizens and the president in their prayers.

"We are asking God to keep watch over these people," he said. "And we are encouraging them to keep these people in their thoughts and prayers for as long as this effort is going on."

At Westview Community Church, Zandra Thompson, wife of Dave Thompson, senior pastor, led the church in praying for everyone involved in the conflict.

She asked that God watch over and protect those serving in the military as well as the Iraqi families involved.

And for peace to come soon.

"I pray that the war will end quickly," Thompson said.

Saturday evening mass was opened at St. Isidore Catholic Student Center with prayers for the safe homecoming of soldiers to their families.

"Lead people to a better understanding of God and true peace," Father Keith Weber said, as he led his congregation. "And may God continue to guide and protect all those serving in the military."

"Lord hear our prayers," the congregation responded.

While not all churches are dedicating services to talk of war, McConnell said it is what is on the minds and in the hearts of many people — especially those of strong faith.

"My hope is we can help guide them through what they are thinking and feeling," he said. "It is a difficult time, but God is strong."

Reed said people of faith are very concerned with the well being of humans and preserving life. War, for that reason, makes people question life and death and other critical issues, he said.

But faith and prayer help people see things clearly, even in times of uncertainty.

"People of faith are prepared to live in the gray area," he said. "They get through, just by knowing that God suffers with us in the midst of all of this."

will not fail, and that you will come home victorious."

Brownback agreed. "I am so proud of you guys," he said.

"It is time for (Saddam Hussein's) reign of terror to end. He is finished and you guys are going to do it."

Brownback said he attended the deployment to give the soldiers words of encouragement.

"I wanted to see their faces, to look in their eyes and see how ready to go they are," he said.

"This is a tough mission, and I wanted to get here and say directly thank you and really just to say how honored we are to have these men and women serve our country."

Brownback said that before Sept. 11, a number of people in the United States wondered if Americans still had character and virtue.

Now, he said, Americans are showing that character each day.

"What we're seeing on television now are heroes, and lots of them," he said. "You guys are doing your job, and you're going to bring liberty, freedom and an open society to the Iraqi people, and they've never seen that before."

"You're showing the world an American. It's not one of pride or arrogance, — it's one of character, virtue and power."

Brownback also noted the number of soldiers who will define a new generation.

"This is a battle we haven't seen like this in some period of time," he said. "Stand tall, stand courageous, and know that we're all behind you."

Billions, Lucky Joan, Tentillblue and Ryan Wills. Students also participated in Singled Out, American Idol, sumo wrestling or basketball.

The night began with an opening ceremony that included 'thank you's' from executive staff and St. Jude patients and their families.

Dana Reddick of Council Grove was one of the family members who thanked the crowd. Reddick, mother of 2-year-old Lauren, said it was their first time at an Up 'Til Dawn event.

"It made me very emotional because we were very glad to see all the kids," she said. "It hit close to home."

She said the best part of the night was knowing there are people who care.

Pettit-Scott said the children inspired him, and listening to them speak was moving.

"It really touched my heart," he said. "It makes any struggle all the more worth it."

Barr said that staying up all night had significance.

"We're staying up all night to signify the families who stay up all night to see if their kids are OK," Barr said.

Pettit-Scott said that while he expected a high level of involvement in Up 'Til Dawn at K-State, it was pleasing to be recognized as the top fund-raising school.

"I think it's just realizing Kansas State can set the bar for the rest of the nation as someone to look up to," Pettit-Scott said.

Barr said the success of the campaign is the result of the students who of K-State.

"I think it has a lot to do with the greek community," she said. "I think people around here are just generous and eager to do things that will benefit others."

Maureen McKale, senior event marketing representative for St. Jude, said it was good to see such high interest in the philanthropy at K-State.

"It's amazing to get this many college students involved," McKale said. "It's just amazing what the K-State students have accomplished."

Pettit-Scott said the most important thing to remember about the event is the patients, not the time or money.

"This is about the children," he said. "They're my heroes, and they're why I work so hard."

Street fighting less than 50 miles from Baghdad

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Army forces battled Republican Guard units at Hindiyah on Monday in street fighting scarcely 50 miles from Baghdad, part of stepped-up air and ground strikes in advance of a drive on the capital. A Pentagon official said 8,000 precision-guided bombs have been dropped on Iraq.

American troops encountered rocket-propelled grenades and small arms fire in the dawn raid at Hindiyah, fighting elite Republican Guard units believed repositioned to try to defend the town south of Baghdad.

"There are maneuvers going to try to destroy those divisions that stand in our way" of the capital, Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal said at the Pentagon.

One U.S. soldier was reported killed in one such fight, this one in Najaf. But a Pentagon official also disclosed that U.S. troops killed seven Iraqi women and children at a checkpoint near the same city when their van would not stop as ordered. Two other civilians were injured.

Four Army soldiers died over the weekend at a checkpoint near Najaf in a car bombing carried out by an Iraqi soldier dressed as a civilian.

British officials claimed that 8,000 Iraqis have been taken prisoner so far, but Saddam's foreign minister said it was the invading forces who face the choice between death or surrender. "Every day that passes the United States and Britain are sinking deeper in the mud of defeat," said Naji Sabri.

President Bush warned that Saddam "may try to bring terror to our shores."

ROTC prepares leaders

Program provides wartime training

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States may be at war, but some of our officers won't be fighting right away.

That is because they haven't finished their training. The Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) is an officers' training program for members of the National Guard, Reserves or active duty officers, cadet David Atkins, senior in life science, said.

He said it is a great leadership opportunity for several students on the K-State campus.

"I heard about an ROTC scholarship and applied for it," Atkins said.

"There are military science classes you take that include history and computer classes. Then there is physical training you have to go through, which includes weapons training and battle drills."

Most students who take advantage of the ROTC program are aware of the opportunity to serve their country as a military officer, said Lt. Col. Arthur DeGroat, head of the Department of Military Science. He said the cadets realize

Fire stopped before engulfing barn

Four fires got out of control Sunday and three on Monday, Riley County Fire Chief Pat Collins said.

On Monday afternoon, one fire occurred at 62nd Street and Anderson Avenue and two were on West 40th Street. "When I got back from work, there was a message from Pat (Collins) on our machine saying a fire got out of control this morning and burned part of our property—that was at 10:30," said Shirley Ehm, Manhattan resident at 2241 W. 40th Ave.

"I saw smoke when I got back from work, but I just thought it was under control. I didn't think too much of it."

It wasn't in control, however, and the fire was coming toward their barn filled with hay, in the direction of their house.

On Sunday, a corner of the Ehm's property was burned after a controlled burn got out of control. The fire was started by four K-State students. One was the son of the owner of the property.

"They had a permit, but it didn't help. It still got away," Collins said.

The Ehm's have lived on the property for 55 years and said the controlled

Ballot includes question about Memorial Hospital

Hospital to either rent or lease; Lafene's move still on schedule

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County voters should read carefully when voting for a proposal on Memorial Hospital today, an official said.

A special question included on the ballot describes a proposition to close and terminate Memorial Hospital, 1105 Sunset Ave.

However, County Counselor Stan Morgan said the question's wording may be misleading.

"A majority voting yes will empower commissioners to close and terminate the hospital, but that just means to start moving it out from the Board of Trustees and into the hands of Mercy," he said. "It doesn't mean the building won't be used for health care — it will."

Morgan said the county has owned the building since the 1950s, subleasing the facility to Mercy Health Center in 1996.

Mercy leases the building for $18,000 a year, but has offered to buy the facility for $1,950,000 if the proposition passes. The hospital also will accept all financial responsibility for the building and surrounding property, Morgan said.

"Mercy would take it over right away, even though they haven't made payment in full on the building,"

Voters will decide who will represent them on City Commission and the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education on Tuesday in the Riley County general election.

Polls open at 7 a.m. and close at 7 p.m., with locations throughout the city. Manhattan's polling places were permanently reduced from 32 to 13 in the primary elections Feb. 25 because of the fiscal year's constraints. A list of locations can be accessed at www.co.riley.ks.us.

Here is a look at the following candidates for City Commission and USD 383 School Board:

City Commission candidates

There are six candidates for three open positions on Manhattan's City Commission.

Marolyn Caldwell, retired legal secretary with Hewitt Law Firm in Washington D.C., owns a desktop publishing business and is a writer with two published books. She received a bachelor's degree in English in 1981.

Caldwell said her voice as a Commissioner will benefit the city.

"I will represent people who don't currently have a voice on the commission, like students which make up half the population of the city," she said.

John Collinson, engineer at Reid Plumbing, Manhattan, received a bachelor's degree in engineering in 1987 and a master's degree in engineering in 1991.

Collinson said his engineering experience should benefit the Commission.

Postal staff practices wrapping each other in toilet paper, aluminum foil

A New York Daily News investigation revealed in March that the Postal Service has spent at least $3.6 million of stamp buyers' money in recent years sending its Inspector General staff through a series of executive conferences that featured exercises in wrapping each other in toilet paper and aluminum foil, building sand castles in freezing weather at the beach, and freely making animal noises, all because the conference sponsors convinced Inspector General Karla Corcoran that those exercises would improve job performance and make the staff work together better. Other therapeutic tasks included dressing in cat costumes and asking make-believe wizards for advice.

James Albert Ernest
Togo, 20, of Brisbane, arrested for mooning a policeman, claimed in December that Australia's Constitution gave him the right to stick out his bare buttocks in political protest, which he said was part of his Aboriginal tradition.

In March, after someone reported a brick thrown through his window, authorities went to the neighboring home of Phillip and Jerry Logan in Wyandotte, Okla., to question them. The Logans put out the word for other family members to come by and help them, and there soon broke out a series of fights that eventually involved 30 law enforcement officers from eight agencies. Six Logans (including the 61-year-old patriarch and the 55-year-old mother) were taken into custody. According to the Ottawa County sheriff, the immediate members of the Logan family have been charged with 250 crimes in the last five years.

A 36-year-old man from Arcadia, Fla., checked himself into a counseling clinic in March after being identified as the one who had been pretending in public to be choking on food and persuading women to grasp him in the Heimlich maneuver, after which he would hug them lavishly and attempt clumsily to develop a relationship.

A sheriff's spokesman in Charlotte County, site of the most recent reports, said the man probably had done nothing illegal. (Novelist Chuck Palahniuk, author of "Fight Club," recently published "Choke," whose storyline roughly matches the man's actions, but apparently some incidents predated the book's publication.)

Readers' choice

Three men fell to their deaths into a 40-foot latrine pit in Mombasa, Kenya, in March, all because the first man chivalrously climbed down a ladder into the pit to retrieve a woman's cell phone but fell off and suffocated. The other two men then climbed down, but also fell off, attempting to rescue the one before him. A search crew finally brought up the three bodies four hours later, but no cell phone.

Latest protests

Belgian actor Benjamin Verdonck lived nearly naked in a cage with a pig in Ghent for three days in November hoping the pig would "teach" him why there is such strife in the world.

In October, in the midst of a People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals anti-milk demonstration at an Aberdeen, Scotland, high school, about 100 milk-loving students spent 10 minutes angrily drenching PETA's cow-costumed spokesman with milk.

Compelling explanations

Gerald F. Berg gave police a false name when stopped, saying he had left his wallet at home, but when police spotted the wallet in Berg's pants pocket, along with methamphetamine, Berg quickly professed confusion, telling police that the pants he was wearing weren't his (Spokane, Wash., October).

Police in Warren, Ohio, arrested Roger A. Hunt, 41, on New Year's Day and charged him with kidnapping his girlfriend, despite his story that the couple were just blissfully headed out to dinner in his truck. Police said their suspicions were aroused when they noticed that the woman was barefoot and Hunt tried to explain that by saying, "She's from Virginia. She doesn't wear shoes (to go out to dinner)."

Robert Paul Rice, serving 1 to 15 years in Utah State Prison, had filed a lawsuit demanding that the prison accommodate him as a vampire by providing special "vampire" meals and conjugal visits that would allow him to partake "in the vampiric sacrament" ("drinking blood"), but an appeals court turned him down in October. A prison spokesman said that no one gets conjugal visits in Utah, blood-drinking or otherwise.

People who don't read the news

The Transportation Security Administration revealed in March that, in the last 12 months, airline passengers at U.S. airports had been found by screeners to have tried to board with 4.8 million prohibited items, including 1.4 million knives, 1,100 guns, 125,000 incendiary items and 40,000 box-cutters.

Classy Cats compete

The Classy Cats perform for family and friends Sunday to get ready for their national competition in Florida.

Dance team to travel to Florida for national competition, hopes to improve

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Goodbye sunflowers. Hello Sunshine State.

The Classy Cats are leaving today for the National Dance Alliance dance competition in Daytona, Fla., where they will try to improve upon last year's 11th place finish.

The team's chances are looking good, Coach Kathleen Henao said, as the team is ranked fourth going into Thursday's preliminary competition. The ranking was assigned based on video entries submitted by teams. The Classy Cats' video performance was good enough to earn free hotel accommodation for the competition.

Eighteen of the 24 members will be making the trip to Daytona, Henao said. Their primary goal for the competition will be to advance to finals and improve upon last year's performance.

Andrea Johnston, senior in nutritional sciences, said the team's experience from last year should prove beneficial.

"Really, we have a good chance of placing higher than we did last year," Johnston said. "We know more what's going on now since we've been there before."

Another factor that could help the team's chances, Johnston said, is that the dance routine the Classy Cats will perform was choreographed by a Florida native who also works for the National Dance Alliance. The routine's higher level of difficulty and the choreographer's expertise should help the team's chances, Johnston said.

In addition to gauging themselves by last year's performance, the Classy Cats also would like to spoil some other teams' positions, Henao said.

Schools like Louisville, Brigham Young University, University of Kentucky and Rutgers usually place their dance teams among the best in the nation.

Finishing among or above these marquee teams would help bolster the Classy Cats' image, she said.

Unlike some other schools around the nation, Henao said, the Classy Cats don't focus entirely on national competition. Although the dancers enjoy the attention and opportunity to perform, their top priority is serving the university, she said.

"They love the chance to represent the university," Henao said. "They feel fortunate to be part of this program, but it's also nice to know your abilities are as strong as other dance teams."

The Classy Cats are a part of the K-State Marching Band, and they perform at football, basketball and volleyball games, as well as many other university activities.

This week's competition will be the team's second in two years, following a six-year hiatus from national competition.

"They love the chance to represent the university. It's also nice to know your abilities are as strong as other dance teams."

Student Senate seeking more input from peers

Student body president invites students to attend meeting, share personal opinions

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student senators met with university administrators Sunday night to discuss the future of student-centered enhancements at K-State.

At the meeting, senators and administrators discussed and prioritized where the additional $10 million in tuition revenue for next year will be allocated.

Seth Bridge, academic affairs chair, said the meeting allowed senators to organize their proposal for enhancements.

In addition, Bridge said that K-State will make a plan that will fit the student's needs rather than replicating a plan from the University of Kansas, which was proposed in earlier meetings this semester.

"Each year we're going to look at things and prioritize," he said. "We talked about KU's a lot because they do have a lot of formalized input."

"We're doing something that's going to fit K-State. We're not in the same position with administration, we're a lot closer and willing to work with each other."

Student senators and university administrators are on schedule for their proposal, which will be read by the Kansas Board of Regents in April and May, said Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement. The Board will also take final action on the proposal in May, he said.

"I think that we're making good progress, and I think that it's a good process," he said.

John O'Hara, Student Senate chair, said the meeting allowed senators to interact with Krause and Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

This, O'Hara said, was one of the reasons the meeting was so productive.

"There are good, positive things that came out of last night's meeting," he said. "It brings us up to speed on where we need to be."

O'Hara said that student input from those outside Senate is encouraged for the next meeting at 8 p.m. Sunday in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

"We need to get more students to voice their concerns and address their issues," O'Hara said.

"There are a lot of different enhancements we could see next year that we are not even aware of."

Those interested in attending the meeting should come with suggestions and be ready to express their opinions, he said.

"We're not too far along in the process, and this will be one of the most visible items that students will see for the entire year."

Bosco said the Senate's progress will benefit the entire student body.

"This is an extraordinary opportunity to develop a list of high impact programs that will affect the retention of undergraduate students for he next year and have those projects and services funded by our increase in tuition," Bosco said.

Let your voice be heard

An additional meeting with Student Senators and university administration regarding student enhancements will take place at 8 p.m. Sunday in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Wives, fiancées left behind as war deployments continue

Loved ones find comfort in support groups, each other

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Staci Novak got married, she knew there was a chance her husband would have to go overseas soon.

Just two weeks after the wedding ceremony, her husband, Tony, was deployed from Fort Riley to Kuwait. Novak has not received any contact from her husband since March 14.

"Before the war, I talked to him on the phone about once a week," Novak, junior in education, said. "Now, I don't know when to expect calls."

The Novaks are not strangers to being apart. Tony spent four months in basic training and another six months last year training in Kuwait. Staci said the time apart has been difficult, but support from other soldiers' wives in the same situation has helped her cope.

"I don't know what I'd do without those girls," Novak said. "They say there's a bond between soldiers' wives, too."

The support among families of deployed troops is one of the primary ways to deal with being apart, said Deb Skidmore, deputy public information officer at Fort Riley.

The Family Support Center at Fort Riley offers a network of families, chaplains and counselors for those with family members who have been deployed, Skidmore said.

"Any type of problem you can imagine, we have a counselor to help or can refer you to someone who can help," she said.

The post's Chain of Concern is a network of spouses that work together to plan lunches, outings for children, support meetings and many other activities for families of deployed troops.

This type of support group works well, Skidmore said, because many wives have experienced deployments before and can help families who are new to the situation.

But there are more than wives who are left behind when troops are deployed.

Haley Rankin, sophomore in interior design, became engaged to Mike Wilson, sophomore in construction science, shortly before he was deployed as part of the Army National Guard.

Wilson has been stationed in North Carolina for more than a month, Rankin said, but he expects to be deployed to Kuwait soon.

"Basically, I'm just missing him a lot — and worrying," Rankin said.

The most difficult part so far, Rankin said, is getting used to Wilson's absence, because they spent so much time together when he was in Manhattan.

Contact with her fiancée includes regular phone calls, Rankin said, but she knows the communication will slow if he goes to Kuwait.

Rankin will wait until the summer to begin planning the wedding, but she said she expects to do most of the planning without Wilson.

To pass the time while their soldiers are away from home, Rankin and Novak both said they try keep themselves busy with school, family and friends.

Novak said that indulging herself in work doesn't allow her to think of her fears of losing her husband to war.

"You just don't let yourself think about it," she said.

"You can't live a normal life if you're worried about your husband dying."

But for all the fears and time apart, Novak said her husband's deployment is actually making their relationship stronger.

"When we get through these obstacles," Novak said, "there's nothing that can get in our way. We'll be able to look back and see how much stronger we are."

"I don't know what I'd do without those girls. They say there's a bond between soldiers, but there's a bond between soldiers' wives, too."

TO THE POINT

Students should voice concerns about revenue

Student Senate members are seeking input from the student body in regards to where the $10 million in additional tuition revenue should go next year.

Members have already proposed that part of the money go to the Global Education Initiative as well as to increases in student employee wages and GTA/GRA salaries, among a list of other items.

However, the group still wants to give students the opportunity to voice their opinions regarding where the additional money is spent.

John O'Hara, Senate chair, said there are still ideas that have not yet been taken into consideration due to the lack of communication among the student body.

Therefore, students should take advantage of this opportunity to express their concerns by attending Sunday's meeting or simply contacting their student senators.

Not often do students have the chance to provide input to the university administration, especially when it concerns where tuition dollars are spent. It is, therefore, important to voice ideas before final action is taken on this proposal.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Watching a guy get a DUI in front of your house: priceless.

In my day, I've met a lot of girls, quite a few young women, one or two ladies, but I've never met a damsel. Where'd they all go?

Always remember, electricity is nothing more than organized lightning.

Mike Clark, part of the reason you can't find the perfect combination is because you didn't pick me to play second base.

My Big Fat Greek Week was more like a big fat waste of my time.

Now that we've had our period of nonviolence, can we have our period of ultraviolence please?

Why is it that 80 percent of America supports the war, but we have to listen to the 20 percent of burned-out hippies that work at the Collegian be anti-war? That's ridiculous.

Why is it that when soldiers are off to war, our teen pregnancy rates decline?

I support the killing of innocent Iraqis. Keep Saddam in power. End the war.

I'd just like to tell Angel Wilson that she's ignorant, and she should stop making a fool out of herself in the Collegian.

My Big Fat Greek Week? Who are the ad wizards who came up with this one?

I think President Bush and the rest of Congress have a lot more information about the reasons to be fighting this war than anyone on the Collegian editorial board.

SPRING BREAK GONE WRONG

Illustrations by Anna Wetzel | COLLEGIAN

Hang-overs, cold sores make for bad souvenirs

Spring break wasn't officially over until yesterday. MTV has been providing the public service of airing and re-airing their own spring break celebrations from Miami, Fla., for all of you that didn't go south and return with three rolls of film of wet T-shirt contests.

Many of the shows include thousands of scantily clad men and women jumping and dancing, whether there is music or not.

Bathing suits are the outfit of choice. The more conservative women wear a wrap around their hips while their male counterparts wear a tank-top.

The hosts include pop idols, such as Mandy Moore, and VJs from regular MTV programming. Some shows include young men and women partaking in talent competitions or reviewing their blind date, which MTV set them up on, in front of the hormonally charged audience.

MTV also includes such shows as "Miami Undercover," showing groups of spring breakers shakin' their things in Miami's nightclubs.

Clothing in the nightclubs doesn't stray too much from the daytime swimsuits. The only difference I could observe was the increase in makeup. I am appalled, yet not surprised, to see what "having fun," on spring break is all about. The camera follows bouncing breasts and any tongue that may leave the mouth for more than a few seconds.

There are shining foreheads, glossy eyes and people bounding in front of the camera to be seen at their time of spring break glory.

Nightclubs don't close until the early morning. Then, with a few hours of beauty sleep (with that person that was much more attractive last night), back out to the MTV stage to bounce and dance to the bikini fashion show.

It is unknown whether many of these people have turned 18 yet, but who cares? It is spring break, a time to relax, spread disease and flaunt whatever you dare to.

Did I forget to mention drink? Relaxation: get your drink on and dance the night away with any random person that grinds on your butt.

My idea of fun seems to lie very distant from the average MTV spring break participant. Passionate kissing with someone I danced with for two songs doesn't appeal to me. Drinking in excess, to the point of stumbling and vomiting, should not be a weeklong phenomenon.

Traveling somewhere warm for spring break is a great idea and should not be abandoned; putting yourself on public display for MTV's profit should be.

Most of the participants in spring break festivities around the globe are students looking for a week of craziness without having to report back to their parents.

The idea is that whatever happens during spring break stays there. This is irresponsible and silly. Reality will set in, whether it is a massive hangover or a cold sore on your lip.

Why has spring break morphed into a time of casual sex and drinking uncontrollably? I cannot answer that.

Those who can afford to waste their money away on one too many body shots or the developing of film to remember that girl that flashed you, go for it.

You are with the MTV generation that loves attention, the horrible new cliché rock and, most importantly, how you look on camera.

Education curriculum fails to make content meaningful

I sit in class, writing this little ditty. Secondary Education Block One is where I'm at. A place where future teachers are supposed to undergo a boot camp-like semester (as one professor put it) and truly decide if they want to teach the pubescents of the world.

One thing is for sure: I want out. Not out of education, but out of Block One. While our teacher lectures to us, reminding us never to (L-word alert) "lecture," the teacher continues for another 90 minutes in, yes, a lecture.

And while we are given a lecture on how to obtain a middle-school student's attention (which is only a span of 12 minutes), I fall asleep.

Even worse, while there are teachers throughout America having their mugs splashed on newspaper front pages for molestation charges or, more recently, for not being aware that students are performing sexual acts on one another, we are being taught how to count in Japanese, how to analyze outdated theories from behaviorists and how to formally introduce one another.

It is a twice-a-week, four-hour class that does nothing but want to drive some of us to alcoholism. And that, my friends, is exactly what my teacher-to-be cohorts and I turned to last week during our lunch break. The only thing that kept the dozen of us awake was the fact that in an hour's time, we would be too sloshed to realize how pretentious our professors' lessons were.

In our hammered states, my teachers-to-be and I discussed what we could do to make the class better. Should we alert the professor? Should we start to sit in front of the class? Should we actually start reading the textbooks?

Perhaps, but that conversation was quickly put on the back burner in order to plan for our Block One pub crawl. That led to discussion of having mini pub crawls every Thursday on our lunch breaks.

Yes, this is sick. But it's a sad truth that must be seen. The teachers of teachers-to-be are driving them to alcoholism, or at least to alcoholic wannabes.

When finishing as amaretto sour seems more important than finishing a lesson plan, the quality of the Block One program should be called in to question.

Though I see the point of taking multiplication-table quizzes and making ridiculously detailed lesson plans (roll-eye gesture), I don't see why we are not discussing what will really affect us.

How does my Block One professor's ability to speak 15 languages relate to me dealing with a student death?

How will counting to 10 in Japanese help me lead discussions with students about war?

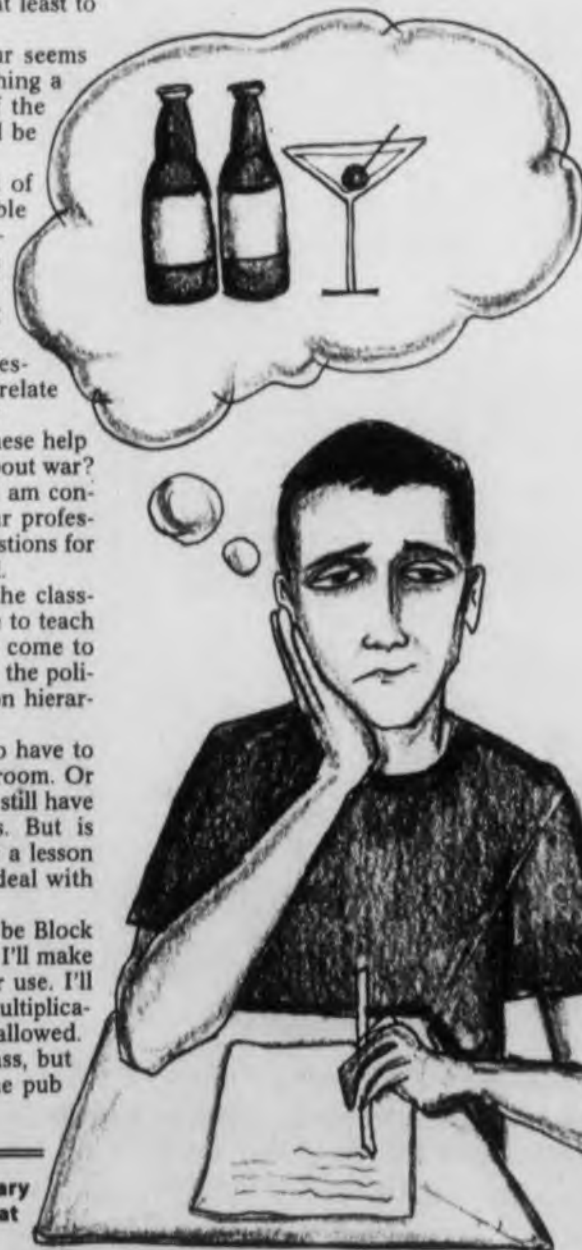

These are questions with which I am concerned. These are not questions our professors are answering, nor are they questions for which their "Unit Lesson Plans" call.

I have 20 more weeks total in the classroom at K-State. Is this enough time to teach me how to deal with students who come to me for advice? Or how to deal with the politics of the educational administration hierarchy? I don't think so.

Like most teachers, I am going to have to learn it all in my high school classroom. Or maybe I am jumping the gun a bit. I still have those 20 weeks left to learn this. But is spending 14 weeks on how to make a lesson plan more important than how to deal with troubled students?

In the meantime, I'll continue to be Block One's puppet and do what I'm told. I'll make the silly lesson plans that I'll never use. I'll count in Japanese, and I'll do my multiplication tables within the two minutes allowed. I can't say I'll make it to every class, but one thing is for sure - I'll be at the pub crawl.

Writer shares myths about war

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Myths are powerful, a speaker said Monday night, and they can be dangerous if people do not recognize them.

Rick Shenkman, host, writer and producer of the prime-time TV series "Myth America," related myths about America's history to today's war with Iraq in a speech sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Shenkman said Americans have myths about who they are and what values they cherish, and the war with Iraq is bringing some of those myths to light.

"People die because of myths," he said. "These are serious times. When I gave this speech in the 1990s, it was a time of peace and prosperity. It was hard to make people understand the consequences of war."

To illustrate them, Shenkman said he would tell about how in 1965, President Lyndon Johnson, without telling the American people, decided to go from a defensive war in Vietnam to an offensive war.

"It is 1965 and right there we have a lie," he said. "It is a myth. The American people think one thing in their heads, but the president of the United States has another idea of what is going on."

When the government made the transition in the spring of 1965, it also opted to execute war games in order to establish a war strategy, Shenkman said.

"In the spring of 1965, the North Vietnamese won the war games," he said. "The government justified it by saying there is something wrong with the games, and that they must be redone. They changed some assumptions, changed the name, but still the North Vietnamese won the Vietnam War."

"And you know what happened to the study? It was stuck in a file drawer and never looked at again."

Americans didn't believe the outcome, Shenkman said, because until then America had never lost a war.

"We thought it was impossible to lose a war in 1965," he said. "That is how powerful the myth is. A myth killed 50,000 people because we didn't want to believe the war game we spent millions of dollars on. Myths are dangerous."

Shenkman compared those myths to the beliefs about the current war in Iraq.

"Left-wingers tend to believe this war is all about oil, and right-wingers tend to believe this war is all about, depending on the week, liberation," he said. "A couple months ago, it was all about weapons of mass destruction. The story from the White House keeps changing, and the right wings can't really be sure."

"The left wings are pretty sure. They have had a consistent myth since the beginning that the war is about oil."

He said each American political party looks to certain myths because they are convenient for organizing supporters for that group.

"They hit emotional buttons among members," he said. "Myths are powerful. If you tend to vote right wing or left wing, you have certain myths you are susceptible to. They are emotional arguments that align with your system of beliefs. Stepping back, the same goes for Americans as a whole. There are certain myths we all hold on to."

To defeat these myths, Shenkman said Americans must learn how to be conscious of what myths Americans have in their minds as liberals or conservatives, or even as Americans.

"You have to do this so when you have to make the hard decisions about should we go for war or peace, you are making those decisions on the basis of hard, cold facts," he said.

"Otherwise, you get into horrible trouble. Otherwise, you get multi-million-dollar war games that come out the wrong way, and you don't believe what the facts are telling you."

FIRE | Windy conditions blamed for multiple fires burns have never gotten out of hand on their property.

Early Sunday morning, there was very little wind, but as the day progressed, so did the wind, which is how it got out of control, Collins said.

He said the same fire was under control Sunday night, but then the wind shifted directions on Monday the fire progressed onto the Ehm's property.

"This is the time of year everybody burns. Yesterday, it got away, and today it got away," Collins said. "It's really dry out, and people don't realize that."

Collins said wind and dry conditions were contributing factors to the fires.

At 5:30 p.m. Monday, Paul Ehm, Shirley's husband, arrived at his house because he saw smoke in the direction of his property. Shirley called 911 to report the fire.

In less than five minutes, Collins pulled up in their driveway because he saw smoke from a neighboring fire and said he didn't realize the fire had changed directions.

By 5:45 p.m., the fire was extinguished, and the Riley County fire trucks and a Konza Prairie fire truck were leaving the property.

Collins said damage estimates were unavailable.

ROTC | Program offers training for future leaders the lucrative pre-professional opportunities, both military and civilian.

"It's a special program," DeGroat said. "You don't just walk by and join up. Most of the students think about joining for a long time. As of recently, there is more intensity to learn."

DeGroat said the United States has been at war since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, so there hasn't been any major changes since the recent attacks on Iraq. He said the biggest change is the way that he is able to teach.

"I teach seniors, and we are able to watch CNN," DeGroat said. "We'll watch, then I'll mute it, then we'll discuss military implications. Now, instead of using historical battles, we can use actual battles to teach military tactics."

He said the K-State campus has a proud tradition of soldiers. DeGroat said he knows several soldiers who are fighting in Iraq, including recent graduates.

"The faculty is full of professional military people who have fought in our nation's wars," DeGroat said. "I know people over there that I have very close relationships with. My kids know their kids."

"But we also have one graduate from last year who is in charge of some Patriot missiles. Another student, who graduated two years ago, came back from Afghanistan and was awarded the Bronze Star for valor."

Some students also have friends who are fighting, cadet Kristin Benson, junior in criminology, said. She said she worries about them, and it can be hard to keep in touch with them.

"One of my friends is in the Marines," Benson said. "They're the ones that are up front right now, so it's hard to contact them. You don't know when you'll talk to them next, and it's hard to know how they're doing."

"You hope for the best. We all hope our friends and family make it back unharmed."

Benson said that for the most part, everything is the same as far as classes and training. She said the fact that ROTC is like a family makes it easier to deal with some situations.

"We get support from Fort Riley, so some things have been moved around," Benson said. "We have a cadet lounge, and it has a TV that is always on the news. We're always talking about it."

"Some of the seniors, if it comes down to it, could get called up. So we like to stay up on the news."

Atkins said he has seen some of the intensity change. He said he has felt some changes himself.

"I have noticed that some people get more serious," Atkins said. "I think there is more pride. I have noticed that I feel more pride being in the ROTC. I think I feel even more pride than when I originally joined."

Even though they are committed to the military, most cadets agree with the war, Atkins said. He said he is prepared to fight to the fullest of his ability for his country.

"I have always supported Bush," Atkins said. "I think we have justified reasons to attack and remove Saddam. He isn't a nice guy, and he shouldn't be in charge."

The ROTC program is an important one, Benson said. She said it has created opportunities that she is glad she has been able to participate in. She said the program might not be for everyone, but it is something people should consider.

"I'd recommend it to everyone," Benson said. "I know it's not for everybody, but I think that not everybody understands what we do. It's unlike anything else I have ever done before, and I really enjoy it."

Mclver fills key role on tennis team

Junior netter clinches 2 of Cats' last 3 matches with singles victories

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every coach dreams of an athlete that can step into a new role and achieve immediate success. For Coach Steve Bietau, he has found one in junior Hayley Mclver.

"This is Hayley's third year in the program," Bietau said. "It's also a year where we don't have a lot of depth. When you put both those things together, it means that individually it's Hayley's position to either step up or we don't do well."

In two of K-State's last three matches, Mclver has taken the court in No. 5 singles competition for the Cats with the match on the line. Both times she stepped up and clinched the win.

"It feels pretty good," Mclver said. "It's pretty nice to win it for the team. I try not to think about it, otherwise I get nervous."

Not only has Mclver been playing clutch tennis of late. She has been doing it during the most critical juncture in the season. With the Big 12 race still wide open, Bietau said an athlete like Mclver is a coach's dream.

"It's what every coach in every sport wants," he said. "This is always crunch time for us, after spring break into April. The way our conference race is playing out this year, it's even longer because there are seven or eight teams all fighting for the same thing, and all have a shot."

Entering the season as a two-time letter winner, Mclver knew it was her job to become a leader.

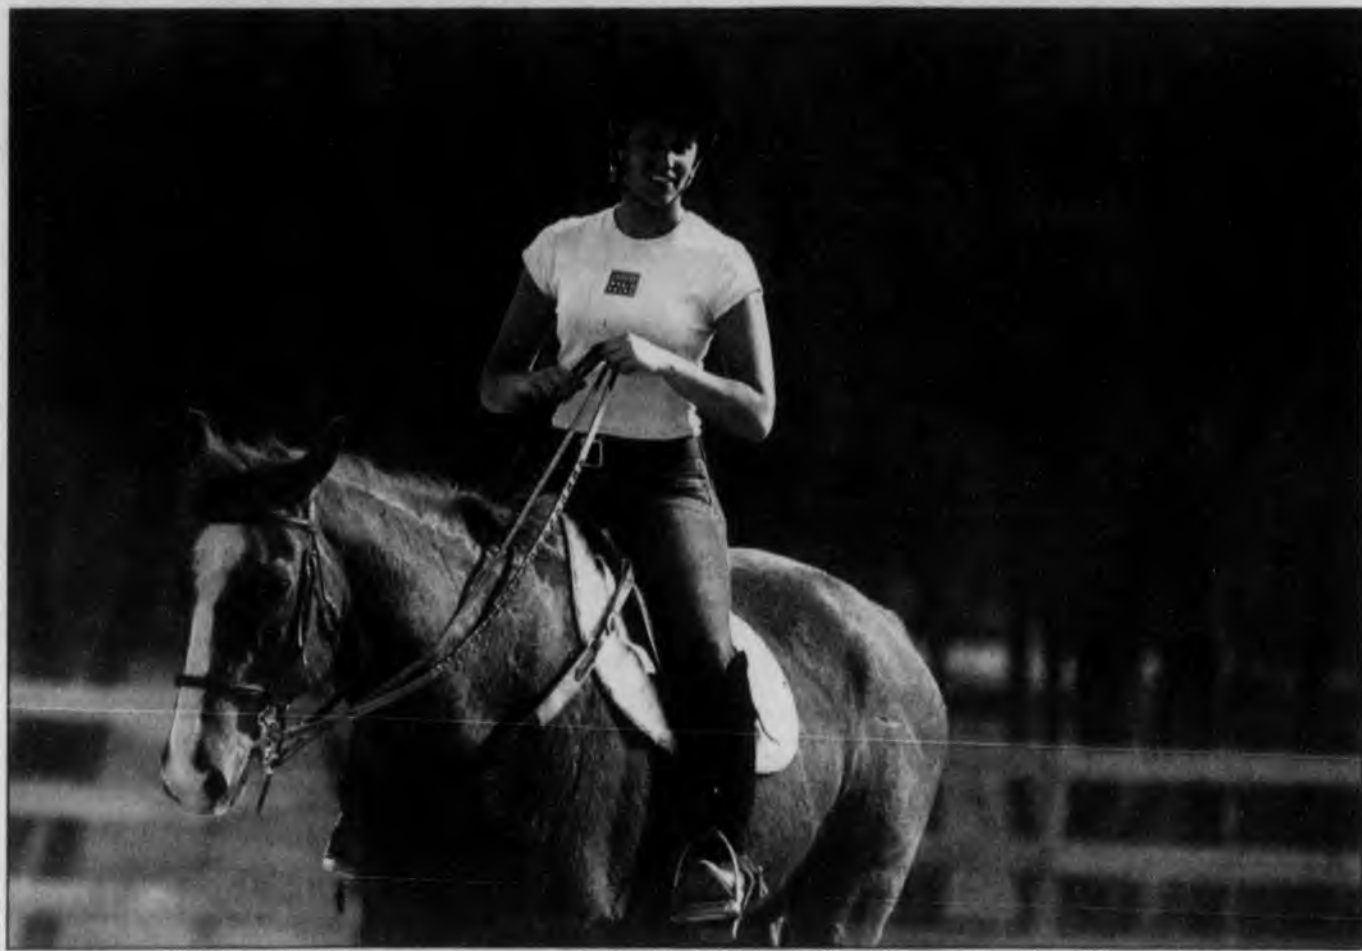

"I feel like, because I'm older, I have more responsibility," she said.

Bietau agreed, saying Mclver has succeeded in her new found responsibility.

"She's handling it better all the time," he said. "The defining point is the way she's handling things. She's shown a greater

Equestrian team continues postseason drive

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The view is always different from the top.

K-State's equestrian program has its Western and English teams ranked first and second, respectively, as they drive further into the postseason. With those accolades comes a certain degree of confidence.

"Other teams definitely realize what they're up against," sophomore English rider Allison Woodworth said. "Most of them haven't seen us, but I know coaches are eyeing us."

Junior Brandi Vogel was slightly more confident and far more animated about the Wildcats' postseason prospects.

"I think we're pretty much going to go in and wipe the competition away," she said.

With zone competition on the horizon, practices have hit full stride to do just that. Assistant coach Meghan Cunningham said the three-week layover between competitions is perfect for preparation.

"I don't like it when we have to go back-to-back," Cunningham said. "Now we can give the individuals going more attention and have a chance to re-evaluate and reassess things."

It also gives them a chance to fine-tune during grueling practices.

"I think they're trying to kill us," sophomore English rider Dehli Burdan said. "They're hitting us pretty hard."

Sophomore Natalie Bennett said outsiders typically aren't aware of the work equestrian puts in.

"We can be given any kind of horse, lazy and slow or crazy, so it takes a lot of balance, leg strength and mental strength," Bennett said.

"My advice to people is to come to practice and get on a horse for a few hours. Once they get off and are waddling around, they'll understand why it's hard."

They'll also understand why K-State is among the nation's best.

"We always practice to win," junior Brandi Vogel said. "We always ride to win."

Winning performances haven't been hard to come by, either. K-State advanced seven English riders from Zone 9, Region 2, winning six of nine events along the way. Meanwhile, the Western team advanced four individuals to zones, where Vogel will continue

Injuries, inexperience plague K-State pitchers

Mike Clark knew his pitching staff couldn't avoid the injury bug forever. He just wishes the pesky thing would start taking smaller bites.

After a relatively injury-free 2002 campaign yielded the program's lowest ERA (5.23) in 25 years, the Cats have taken their share of blows this spring.

Five pitchers are still questionable with injuries, including two of Clark's top three starters in Jim Ripley and Jonathan Gutierrez.

Cat fans should take up Big 12 banner this weekend

I'm not a part of the Jayhawk nation.

Understand that simple truth before reading any further.

Anyone on hand the frightful night I escaped with my life after picking a fight with an enraged KU fan can understand that.

But purple pride aside, I'm excited for the Jayhawks this year. Texas, too.

Now, I understand this might be sacrilegious to some. Kansas being K-State fans' fiercest rival and all.

But I figure when March Madness rolls around, there's nothing left for Wildcat fans to do but put hatred aside and embrace the Big 12 as a conference.

That means donning the crimson and blue foam fingers with one hand and propping up the Longhorns with the other.

If you just woke up from a long slumber, both teams are preparing for a trip to the Final Four in New Orleans.

There's a good chance they could meet in the national championship game, too.

Before you close the paper, let me explain.

See, there's not much going on in Wildcat land this week.

In fact, the whole week is devoid of any K-State sporting events after the Wildcats made a quick exit from the NCAA Women's Tournament.

See, I had a trip to Dayton penciled in for later this week, but plans change, so I'm left looking for something else to cure that jonesin' for sports.

The men's tourney provides that release.

Roy's boys have turned in an improbable season since Wayne Simien was absent from the 'Hawks lineup for much of the year. Instead, Nick Collison and Kirk Hinrich picked up the slack and led KU to a return trip to the Final Four.

Texas, led by T.J. Ford, is poised to make it an exciting three days in New Orleans, too.

But for K-State fans, the excitement should surround the Hawks. Kansas isn't normally considered a hotbed for hoops, and some brave basketball scholars don't even think Roy Williams belongs among college basketball's elite coaches.

They would be wrong, by the way.

For one weekend, K-State's campus should put the purple away and support their neighbors to the east. Lawrence has a great nightlife, at least. Nobody can argue that.

As for me, I'll be glued to the set for both games Saturday. Kansas has the talent to get past Marquette, and if Texas manages to escape Syracuse, an all-Big 12 final would be something worth watching.

But you have options, even if you can't bring yourself to support the Hawks and Horns. Even though the season is just one day old, the Royals are looking like champions.

Quarterback Jake Plummer joined his new teammates on Monday, running and lifting weights at the opening of the Denver Broncos' offseason strength and conditioning program.

Plummer was among 38 Broncos who took part in the morning workout, which included sessions with a yoga instructor.

Plummer, the former Arizona Cardinals quarterback who signed a six-year, $40 million free-agent deal with the Broncos last month, hoped to make a quick adjustment.

Plummer had hoped to begin some light throwing to wide receiver Rod Smith, but Smith begged off Monday.

College basketball | Pitt coach mulls UCLA

Pittsburgh coach Ben Howland met with his players on Monday, but gave no indication whether he was in line to take over at UCLA.

Howland, who called UCLA his "dream job" last week, declined to speak with reporters after meeting with his team. Julius Page, a junior guard, said "No comment" as he and several teammates rushed away from the meeting looking glum-faced.

Several players said previously that Howland's loss would be devastating to a basketball program that had only one winning season in six years before Howland was hired in 1999.

Howland met over the weekend with UCLA athletic director Dan Guerrero, but did not say if he was offered the job. He is believed to be the Bruins' top candidate, and he was the first to interview.

SLEEPY, SLEEPY

Too much sleep or too little, sleeping disorders find ways into students' lives

by Courtney Duffield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sleepless in Manhattan? Students who deal with sleeping disorders, like insomnia, have to learn how to deal with their disorder and still go about their lives.

Some of the most common sleeping disorders are insomnia, oversleeping, narcolepsy, breathing-related sleep disorders and circadian rhythm sleeping disorders, said Nana Ambrosy, advanced registered nurse practitioner.

There are two different categories of sleeping disorders. She said the most common sleeping disorders are categorized as disordered somnia difficulties.

Ambrosy said sleeping disorders can be heightened by the use of drugs. She also said the medical condition delirium can affect the severity of sleeping disorders.

"Stress is another factor that can worsen the effects of sleeping disorders," Ambrosy said.

Sleep walking is part of a category of sleeping disorders called parasomnias.

"This category is associated with nightmares, and includes sleep walking, sleep terror and sleep paralysis," she said.

Ambrosy said sleep walking affects 10 to 13 percent of children, and it is less common for adults to sleep walk.

There are dangers with sleep walking because sleepwalkers have a sort of amnesia that causes them to forget where they were or what they did, Ambrosy said. Sleepwalkers are also able to do complex activities, and that could put them in danger.

"I once knew a family with a child that was a sleepwalker," Ambrosy said. "It was a serious problem for them. The family was suffering from lack of sleep because they were constantly up watching the child to make sure they did not get hurt."

Ambrosy said if she had a child that sleep walked, she would follow her or him around because of dangers, such as walking out into a street and getting hit by a car.

Sleep walking can be helped with medication, Ambrosy said.

Ambrosy said the myth about not waking someone up when they are sleep walking for fear of startling them to death is false.

"I have never heard of someone having a heart attack from being woken up," Ambrosy said. "There might be a rare case or two, but it is very rare, and I have never heard of one."

Dominic Inzerillo, senior is hotel and restaurant management, said he has narcolepsy.

"I was diagnosed at age 16," Inzerillo said. "They were surprised because I was 16, and it usually doesn't mature until around age 18."

Inzerillo said narcolepsy runs in his family.

"My mom and sister also both have it," Inzerillo said.

Inzerillo said he was tired every day, even though his parents made sure he went to bed early and got at least eight hours of sleep at night.

"I went in for some tests at 9 a.m. and they hooked me up to some wires, and I took a nap every two hours," Inzerillo said. "I just watched TV and played Game Boy and then took naps every couple of hours."

Narcolepsy has caused Inzerillo some problems.

"I have had some problems with being tired all the time and not motivated," Inzerillo said. "It causes problems when I cannot get enough sleep, which can be difficult at times in college."

He has a milder form of narcolepsy, so his attacks aren't as severe as some others can have, Inzerillo said.

"With my sleep attacks, I just suddenly feel like I have not slept in like three days," he said. "I usually have a five-10-minute warning before I have an attack and mine last about 20 minutes, but afterwards I am just fine."

Medicine helps lessen the severity of Inzerillo's attacks, but they do not stop them.

"The only problems I have are when I skip my medicine, and I have not done that in a couple of years," he said.

Any student with a disability, including sleeping disorders, can get help if they have documentation of the disability, said Gretchen Holden, director of student disability services.

"Narcolepsy is probably the most common sleeping disorder we see," Holden said.

Holden said most students with sleeping disorders have terrible problems with sleep patterns.

"One way we can help is to help them get all afternoon classes," Holden said. "We also use to have a support group for students with sleeping disorders. About five students were in the group."

Holden said the first step for a student needing help with a disability is to get documentation from a qualified medical professional. After that, there are several ways they can help students, she said.

"We meet with the student and decide the best way to help them," Holden said. "We have even arranged for students to take tests in our office, so we could wake them when they fell asleep and compensate for the time they were asleep."

IN BRIEF

The Associated Press

Paul McCartney turns down the volume, courtesy of Pope John Paul II

Paul McCartney may turn down the volume to avoid disturbing the pope when he plays to an expected 300,000 fans outside Rome's Coliseum in May.

Organizers of the free concert said Monday that the former Beatle may drop some of his louder rock numbers, including "Back in the U.S.S.R." and "Live And Let Die," so the concert won't disturb the 82-year-old pontiff at his quarters in the Vatican nearby.

"We have been advised by Italian contacts that the show could keep His Holiness the Pope up all night," said tour promoter Barrie Marshall.

"Obviously, we do not want to cause any offense or sleeplessness to His Holiness and, because of the closeness of the Vatican to the show at the Coliseum, we are now considering our position on performing loud rock songs."

Jimmy Carter writes historical novel

He's a former president of the United States, a Nobel Peace Prize winner and a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize. Now add something new to Jimmy Carter's résumé: novelist.

"The Homestead," a historical novel set in the South during the Revolutionary War, is scheduled to be published this fall.

"This book teaches us much about what people in the colonies of that region endured during the Revolutionary War, and because it's a novel, Carter is free to recreate their feelings and imagine their pain and joy," Alice E. Mayhew, editorial director of Simon & Schuster, said Monday.

the mound. Six games into the league schedule, Clark is still searching for any of his young arms to step up and prove they can produce.

So far, though, there's not much to get excited about.

During the Cats' current eight-game losing streak, K-State is surrendering more than 10 runs per game from the hill.

As a result, Clark said he's seen his pitchers' confidence suffer.

"You lose your edge a little bit — you lose your confidence — and a little bit is three inches outside the zone rather than being on the black," he said. "That's kind of the way our staff's been."

It's not for a lack of chances to get better. A depleted staff has meant more innings for every healthy Wildcat on the roster.

"There are a lot of guys right now that have had great opportunities to really become major players," Clark said. "They just haven't taken the bull by the horns and done it."

The problem hasn't been limited to Clark's starters either.

With Brett Bagley and Jared Bunn — both considered strong prospects for the long reliever job — hobbled with injuries as well, Clark and pitching coach Mike Hensley have had their work cut out for them when trying to find help from the bullpen.

"It's really hard for me, Mike and all of us to try to get any semblance of roles," Clark said. "On the other side of it, the guys that are coming in just aren't doing a good job of holding the fort either."

The number of innings Clark's bullpen has been forced into is taking its toll too. Converted catcher Jon Mallett went five innings in relief Friday and the Cats' top reliever, Eric Rollins, threw 3 2/3 on Sunday.

"It's at the point right now where we're using the guys a lot more than we anticipated and in different roles," Clark said.

That could be the norm for the season's second half as well, unless Clark gets the news he's hoping for regarding the Cats' long list of key injuries.

"We don't have a lot of time, though," Clark said. "I think we've done a good job of really making a note to the guys that this is something that has to be corrected this week."

With an important 3-game trip to Oklahoma State on tap for this weekend, Clark said his pitchers will see plenty of attention this week in practice.

"We've just got to get our confidence back and pitch in a situation where we're ahead in the count," Clark said. "When we start doing that, then we'll have good things happen."

VOTE | Ballot to include Memorial Hospital proposal

he said. "The Board of Trustees will be dissolved within a matter of weeks or months, and Mercy will have a contract they will operate under."

Morgan said if the proposition passes, Mercy will pay annual rent until it begins payment on the building.

Interests begin to accrue in July 2006, and installment payments will begin then, he said.

"They have the option to either start paying installments and interest on any balance due, or get an extension on an installment for an additional $50,000," Morgan said.

If voters choose not to pass the proposition, Mercy Health Center will continue to lease the facility for the next 10 years, Morgan said.

"Even if the majority of voters vote no, Mercy will continue to operate under their lease and use it as part of their medical care facilities for another 10 years," he said. "If it's voted down, then taxpayers could accrue several expenses after that 10 years is up."

Morgan said selling the building to Mercy is just a better business decision for the county.

County commissioners began looking at the proposition with the onset of economic hard times, Morgan said.

"They began to look at activities the county was involved in that may be better to stay out of all together," he said. "Beginning several years ago, commissioners began planning, began to look at all county functions and determine what was necessary and what would be better for them to discontinue. As economic times worsened, our interest in pursuing these kinds of strategies grew stronger."

Regardless of the proposition outcome, Lafene Health Center is scheduled to move into the main floor of the facility by Aug. 1, said Carol Kennedy, director of health and education promotion at Lafene.

"For us — being tenants of the hospital — the contract would not be affected one way or the other," she said. "If voters decided not to sell it, we would still be leasing it from the hospital because the hospital will be leasing it from the county."

NATIONALS | Team continues with postseason

her quest for back-to-back IHSA national titles.

"Equestrian is just like any other sport," Vogel said. "People see you as number one, and you have to live up to that. You have to try to show them you deserve to be number one."

Two Wildcats proved they were number one this season, with senior Amanda Gigot claiming the region's overall High-Point rider honor in Western. Woodworth was High-Point rider in English.

That brand of leadership is the driving force behind the team's success, Bennett said.

"It's a confidence booster to know we have such strong leaders," she said. "It's intimidating with them always winning, but it psyches us up to know we need to get our points, too."

While the Western team has already secured a spot at nationals, May 1-5 in Murfreesboro, Tenn., the English team must finish in the top two at zones to advance.

But even Cunningham is finding it hard not to look ahead.

"I keep wanting to, but we just need to get through zones first," she said. "That's where I have focused my attention. There is no nationals if we don't get by zones."

So despite having a bull's eye on their backs, equestrian practices continue to be business as usual.

"You're never at the top of your game," Burdan said. "I think you can always be close to it, but that's almost like saying there's no room for improvement."

"We are really strong going into this, though. I think people are going to see that."

commitment in terms of just hard work and preparing herself mentally and physically, and it's shown a more poised, mature player."

McIver said her main goal at the start of the season was to constantly improve, something she feels like she's succeeded in doing.

"I just wanted to improve my tennis," she said. "That was my main goal. I feel like it's getting better every match. I would like to keep winning and keep my winning record going."

Bietau said Saturday's 5-2 victory over 34th-ranked Missouri was an important step toward his team's improvement.

"It was our best performance to date and showed some progress in real important areas," he said. "For what we've done to this point, this was a good weekend and we hope it's something that will propel us to better things."

solving skills to the City Commission," he said. "I have a background in managing monetary projects."

Mark Hatesohl, chiropractor, received his degree in 1983 and an associate's degree in biology in 1980.

"I will help to keep Manhattan affordable while ensuring that the essential public services are maintained and more new jobs are encouraged," he said.

Ed Klimek, director of marketing and business development at Kansas State Bank and current Manhattan mayor, received a bachelor's degree in journalism at K-State in 1972.

Klimek said his past experience as mayor gave him the interest to run again.

"It's been an honor and a privilege to serve as mayor this past year, and I'd like to continue the direction of the past year for the city," he said.

Bruce Snead, engineering extension specialist in the College of Engineering, received a bachelor's degree in architecture in 1974. Snead has been a member of the Commission for eight consecutive years.

Snead said his Commission experience is the reason residents should vote for him.

"Citizens should vote for me because of my record of service, my performance as mayor and because I've demonstrated a commitment to work for what is best for all," Snead said.

Pamela Wilkie is the assistant director of Affirmative Action at K-State. She received a Bachelor of Education, a Bachelor of Science in medical technology, and a master's degree in business administration.

Wilkie said she decided to run for City Commission because of her experience with the university and the city.

"My professional background has given me the experience in setting emotion aside and making decisions based on facts," she said. "The decisions I make will be fair and equitable for everyone."

School board candidates

There are four openings for the USD 383 Board of Education, and because only four candidates are running, all will advance with the exception of a possible write-in vote.

Randy Martin, owner of Hawley Printing Service Inc.; Roger Brannan, retired high school teacher; David Coburn, manager of The Pathfinder; and Nancy Knopp, director of social services at Mercy Health Center, are the four Forces attack Guard

Ground troops clear way to Iraqi capital

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Army ground forces attacked Republican Guard units Tuesday near Karbala, scarcely 50 miles from Baghdad, part of around-the-clock combat pointing toward an assault on the capital. An American POW was rescued from Iraq.

Defense officials said Army units attacked elements of the Medina Division of the Republican Guard in the clash near Karbala, part of an elite Iraqi force targeted by heavy air bombardment over several days.

Pfc. Jessica Lynch, a 19-year-old supply clerk from Palestine, W. Va., was the POW rescued. Neither her condition nor the details of her rescue were immediately available.

"Coalition forces have conducted a successful rescue mission of a U.S. Army prisoner of war held captive in Iraq. The soldier has been returned to a coalition-controlled area," Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks said in the briefest of appearances at U.S. Central Command in Qatar. Other officials provided her name.

6 arrested for drug charges

Individuals caught with crack cocaine

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six individuals were arrested for various drug charges dealing with crack cocaine on Monday in Manhattan.

Two warrants were served on March 28 at 1012 Potawatomi Court and the Ramada Inn room 501.

Seven more were served on Monday at 3000 Tuttle Creek Blvd., No. 184; 730 Crestwood Drive, No. 3; 1101 Woodland Drive; 918 Gardenway, No. 1; 1909 Beck Street; 2046 College View; and 922 Riley Lane.

Capt. Gary Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department said the first set of warrants served were connected with the second set, but would not comment on whether one led to another.

The RCPD has been working an ongoing investigation of the distribution of crack cocaine in Riley County, which resulted in the nine warrants and six arrests. As of Tuesday afternoon, 12 grams of crack cocaine, one and a half pounds of marijuana, three vehicles, $2,500 cash, two firearms and miscellaneous electronic items had been recovered.

Those who were arrested are Jeffrey Jones, Rayona Pryor, Tylesha Pryor, Robert Z. Lewis, Robert A. Lewis and Robin Jackson, all on various charges, including possession and intent to distribute crack cocaine.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said more arrests will be made and investigations on crack cocaine distribution will continue.

"You're close to campus, and you have an environment where all your needs are met, and you have accessible resources available to you. It's just an all-around better environment."

Emily Walker
RESIDENT ASSISTANT AT PUTNAM HALL

THE HALL LIFE

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Martha Barthuly, junior in marketing, does her homework as her roommate Jena Primm, freshman in marketing, relaxes on the couch in their Putnam Hall room. Putnam Hall is the third residence hall Barthuly has lived in. She lived in Moore Hall as a freshman and Goodnow Hall as a sophomore and plans on living in a fourth hall next semester.

Social benefits can make halls positive

By Tina Deines
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the biggest decisions for an incoming freshman at K-State is where to live. For Martha Barthuly, it was the residence halls.

Barthuly, junior in marketing, moved into Moore Hall two years ago, and liked it so much that she decided to return to the residence hall life — twice.

"When you're an incoming freshman, it's the best thing you can do because you learn to be social with everybody and meet lots of people."

Since her freshman year, she has lived in Moore and Goodnow halls and is now in Putnam Hall. Barthuly said she chose different halls each year for variety.

"There's a lot of them, so I figured why not just get a taste of all of them," Barthuly said.

K-State has 10 residence halls from which to choose.

Barthuly said the biggest benefit of living in the residence halls is parking.

"It's on campus, so you don't have to worry about driving and getting a parking spot every morning," Barthuly said.

Another advantage, she said, is the academic assistance available to students.

"If you need help on homework, there's always somebody around who can answer questions for you or guide you in the right direction," Barthuly said.

The residence hall system has several meal plans for students, ranging from 10 to 20 meals per week.

Although Barthuly said she likes the meals, it is sometimes hard to eat them if she has other things going on at the same time.

Barthuly said Derby Dining Center offers "Scholarships" as a dining option later in the evening, which fits into her schedule.

The prices range from College Living

Where you live greatly affects your day-to-day life. The Collegian takes a look at five different living situations students may choose. Today, think about the residence halls. Next week, see what sorority and fraternity members experience in greek houses.

Martha Barthuly, junior in marketing, checks her mail after supper before heading back to her room in Putnam Hall. Barthuly said she enjoys living in the residence halls.

$2,180 to $2,880 per semester depending on meal plan, residence hall and living arrangements, such as suite versus non-suite.

Like all students, Barthuly was faced with the decision of living with a friend or going "potluck" and opted for the latter each year.

"It's occasionally good and occasionally bad," she said.

Barthuly said the residence halls can handle roommate complaints better than off-campus housing. One problem, she said, is that officials cannot force someone to vacate a room.

"In some instances, I think they can do a better job at being flexible," she said.

"If you're not happy in a living situation, they should be able to do something about it."

She said another problem is increased noise, but this problem is resolved through enforced quiet hours.

Klimek, Snead, Hatesohl, elected onto City Commission

Klimek receives highest number of votes, will be mayor in 3 years

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Citywide elections resulted in the re-election of two incumbent city commissioners, Ed Klimek and Bruce Snead, and introduced Mark Hatesohl to a two-year commission term.

Hatesohl said he is not discouraged to have received the third most votes.

"The first time Ed Klimek got elected, he only got a two-year term," Hatesohl said.

The City Commission general election percentages looked similar to the primary election results, Hatesohl said.

He said he received about 19 percent in both elections, and he was surprised it didn't change.

"But at least I held my Unofficial City Commission election results

Ed Klimek	3,358	24.57
Bruce Snead	3,105	22.71
Mark Hatesohl	2,661	19.47

own," Hatesohl said. "It was a lot of work, but we're on board — and with two popular incumbents. I'm glad I've got my foot in the door."

Bruce Snead, city commissioner, and Ed Klimek, mayor, both said they don't see a lot of changes with the city electing Hatesohl as the new commissioner.

"This has been a conservative City Commission, and I think people respect the last two years of conservative governing," Klimek said.

In three years, Ed Klimek will become the mayor of Manhattan because he received the most votes, and

Evan Semón | COLLEGIAN

Mark Hatesohl is congratulated by wife, Pamela Hatesohl, at his election party at the Fairfield Inn after winning a seat on the City Commission in Tuesday night's general election.

Bruce Snead will become the mayor in four years.

"It feels great as an incumbent of eight years of service to be re-elected," Snead said.

Marolyn Caldwell, retired Manhattan resident, lost the election by 447 votes but said she learned a lot from campaigning, like how much she doesn't like campaigning.

"The most important thing I learned was you have to approach people in the right way," she said.

SPOTLIGHT | War in Iraq

Wednesday in Baghdad

Allied forces continue to push toward Baghdad in latest rounds of military action in Iraq.

War in Iraq takes toll on both sides

Tuesday, March 25

■ U.S.-led coalition forces kill 150-200 Iraqis in a land battle in the Euphrates Valley, east of Najaf. A sandstorm prevented the 3rd Infantry Division from calling for air cover. U.S. officials did not report any casualties.
■ Overnight explosions rocked Baghdad. U.S. Central Command said a Tomahawk cruise missile struck Iraq's state-run television station building and buildings housing satellite communications.

Wednesday, March 26

■ Reports from U.S. military officials conflict. A CNN correspondent cited sources saying 1,000 Republican Guard troops had left the Baghdad area, heading south toward Najaf. However, officials at Central Command headquarters that said according to field reporters, the reports were based on inaccurate information.
■ British Prime Minister Tony Blair arrived at Camp David for talks with President Bush. Bush warned that the war was "far from over" but the "day of reckoning for the Iraqi regime" was drawing near.
■ At the United Nations, Iraq's UN ambassador said the Iraqi people were being subjected to barbaric military invasion, leading to thousands of casualties. Iraqi military officials said U.S. munitions killed 15 Iraqi civilians at a market. Iraq reported 78 deaths.

Thursday, March 27

■ More than 130,000 American troops were deployed to the Persian Gulf region. Military officials said the deployments represented a continuation of the Pentagon's war plans, not a change in strategy.
■ A U.S. Air Force B-2 stealth bomber dropped two satellite-guided bombs on a target in Iraq. U.S. Central Command said the bombs targeted a national communication network located in downtown Baghdad.
■ Coalition forces report 47 deaths. Iraq's health minister reports 350 civilians have been killed in the war, however the number could not be confirmed.

Friday, March 28

■ A missile struck a closed shopping mall in Kuwait City shortly after 1:30 a.m. It was the 13th missile launched from Iraq toward Kuwait, but most have been knocked down by Patriot missiles.

■ In its first attack deep inside Iraq, the 101st Airborne used helicopters to hit an Iraqi armored brigade about 100 miles southwest of Baghdad. Coalition planes were also involved in the attack, which destroyed Iraqi tanks.

Saturday, March 29

■ Bloody U.S. battle uniforms were found in an Army hospital in Nasiriyah, Iraq. A torture device made of a metal cot and car battery was also found.
■ U.S. Central Command announced two Marines had been killed in separate incidents. One was killed after being hit by a Humvee during a firefight with Iraqi soldiers. Another was drowned when the Humvee in which he was riding rolled over into a canal in south-central Iraq.
■ At least four explosions rock a residential area in Baghdad and smoke poured from apartment buildings. Bombing in Baghdad and the northern cities of Mosul and Balak have been the most intense.
■ A suicide bomber blew up his car at a military checkpoint in the central Iraqi town of Najaf, killing four U.S. soldiers.

Sunday, March 30

■ U.S. Central Command reports about 100 Iraqi "terror squad members" were killed in fighting in southern Iraq. U.S. soldiers also took 50 Iraqi troops prisoner.
■ Coalition ground forces approached within 50 miles of Baghdad, bombardment of Iraqi regime targets continued, senior military officials said. The Air Force intensified its air runs to 1,800 sorties, or 75 runs per hour. The average had been 1,000 sorties a day. More than half the airstrikes were directed at the Republican Guard.

Monday, March 31

■ U.S. soldiers fired on a van carrying women and children when it failed to stop at a military checkpoint, killing seven people and wounding two. Central Command officials said the soldiers acted according to rules of engagement.
■ Coalition forces report 68 total deaths. Seven U.S. military members are being held as prisoners of war and 19 are listed as missing in action.

Country Stampede nears

Tickets now available by phone, Internet

By Jessica Packard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The eighth annual Country Stampede Music Festival is returning this summer to Manhattan, and tickets are now available.

This year's festival, located at Tuttle Creek State Park, will run June 26 through June 29.

The four-day lineup of performances will include country artists Kenny Chesney, Martina McBride, Deana Carter, Hank Williams Jr., Sawyer Brown and others.

Lisa Clevenger, business manager for Country Stampede, said now is the best time to get tickets because of their low prices.

Those who purchase tickets before May 1 will receive an early-bird special at $40 for a one-day pass or $65 for a weekend pass. Tickets purchased from May 1 to June 25 will be $45 for a one-day pass and $80 for a weekend pass.

All tickets purchased at the gate will have an additional cost.

Campsites and parking passes are also available for the weekend.

Information about prices and locations for campsites and additional vehicles is available on the Country Stampede Web site and by phone. Early-bird specials are also now available for campers and drivers.

Students will have several opportunities to win free tickets, said Alison Perris, Internet marketing project manager for TBA Entertainment Corporation.

VIP passes for each day of the festival will be given away to winners. These passes include VIP seats and parking, meals, snacks, Pepsi and Miller products, private restrooms, and access to the souvenir tent, she said.

Perris said those interested can go to the Web site and enter online.

In addition to entertainment, Country Stampede is also offering employment opportunities.

Perris said those interested in working or volunteering for Country Stampede can apply online until May 1.

Becky Blake, executive vice president and director for the Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau, said she expects Country Stampede to bring additional revenue to the area.

"It's a tremendous event that comes at a great time of year," Blake said.

She said those attending Country Stampede bring about $5 to $6 million to Manhattan.

"I think a lot of people assume that those who visit the Stampede stay at the campsites," Blake said.

However, Blake said, 53 percent actually stay elsewhere.

Blake also said Country Stampede is a good way to market Manhattan to new visitors.

"Country Stampede has given us a vehicle to showcase Manhattan to folks that may not have otherwise come here," Blake said.

Tickets and campsites are available for purchase by phone at (800) 795-8091 or on the Internet at www.countrystampede.com.

Those interested should visit the Web site and click on the Fan Club tab to enter contests.

According to a marketing survey taken last year, 20 percent of the Country Stampede attendees had never been to Manhattan.

Country Stampede has encouraged people to return to Manhattan, Blake said.

"Those interested in outdoor recreation have returned to the Manhattan area because of their exposure to Manhattan at the Stampede," Blake said.

Forum to give faces to print version

By Tristan Hinderliter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will have the opportunity to speak in a forum from noon to 1 p.m. today in the Union Courtyard regarding anything happening on campus, in Manhattan, the Kansas or the world.

The open-mic forum "Will You Speak?" is being sponsored by a new student organization called Challenge Central.

Any student who is interested will have the opportunity to speak for two to three minutes, said David McCandless, student coordinator and senior in political science.

The event was inspired in part by the Collegian's Campus Forum, anonymous which students can voice their opinions.

"In the Forum, there's a lot of people calling in and saying nonsense stuff," said Vy Bui, forum organizer and senior in finance.

"It's entertaining, but we wanted something that Speak your mind

What: "Will You Speak?" open-mic forum
When: Noon to 1 p.m., today
Where: Union Courtyard

would give people accountability."

Bui said the main purpose of the forum is to give students a chance to have a conversation about something they're passionate about and to give them accountability for what they're saying.

"I hope people have the courage to know that whatever they're saying is important," Bui said.

"We want to hear the students and faculty speak."

McCandless will be facilitating the event, moving the microphone from speaker to speaker.

"Anyone who wants to will have the opportunity to come up and speak their mind," he said.

There are no limitations regarding topic other than basic ground rules such as no profanity or personal attacks.

"This is not in any way connected to the war in Iraq," McCandless said.

"If people want to talk about that, they can say whatever they want to say. But that is not the focus of this."

Challenge Central is a student organization that was formed by the participants of Leadership Challenge, a campuswide residential leadership retreat in January.

The 60 students and 15 faculty and staff who attended the four-day retreat focused on ways they could improve the K-State campus, McCandless said.

After discussion, they decided to divide up into three areas of concentration: communication, collaboration and diversity.

The "Will You Speak?" forum was the brainchild of the communication group.

"It's about making change at K-State through service, through developing ideas, figuring out what we want to see changed and going out and doing something about it," McCandless said.

With the advantage of living in a residence hall and the positive experience she has had so far, Barthuly will be coming back for more. She has already reserved a room and roommate in Van Zile Hall for next year.

Emily Walker, Barthuly's resident assistant and senior in nutritional sciences, said the residence halls have many advantages.

"You're close to campus, and you have an environment where all your needs are met, and you have accessible resources available to you," Walker said. "It's just an all-around better environment."

As an RA, Walker's duties include administering monthly programs, helping residents get acquainted and being a leader in the event of a crisis.

She said that while it takes time for the residents to warm up to her, once they do, she is often looked to for assistance.

For Caleb Jennison, residence hall life isn't appealing.

"I've had a lot of roommates, and it doesn't matter how good of a roommate you have," Jennison, junior in art, said. "Personal space is pretty much inaccessible in the dorms."

Jennison said that he was ready for an apartment.

"You just sort of grow out of it and get ready to go to an apartment and mature past it," Jennison said. "I've got friends that say life got so much better when they got out."

TO THE POINT Newly-elected officials must keep promises

The vote totals are in, and it's time for Manhattan's newly-elected officials, mostly notably the city commissioners, to keep the promises made throughout their campaigns.

This year, commission candidates worked hard to make an effort to reach out to members of the K-State student body.

Debates were held on campus, and candidate presented platforms based on students' needs and issues in the city, such as housing and the responsibility of students to vote and take action.

Commission candidates came to K-State expressing the need for adequate housing for students and the importance of the student vote, and even stated that they felt it was the right and responsibility for students to cast a vote.

The votes have been cast, and city commissioners should stand by their platforms and make the Manhattan community a better place to live for both residents and students, who live in this town nine months out of the year.

These officials must keep in mind the words they spoke to K-State and when making tough decisions regarding city issues, they must keep the student body in mind.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

I think Dan Smith is a spy for KU.

How come no one has noticed that in all of Mike Clark's years here, he has never had a good team. Maybe our AD should look at that.

Why do they call one sport "women's tennis" but then turn around and the other one is "ladies' golf?"

Please don't forget sunbathing in between classes — Old Memorial Stadium.

Paul Restivo, can I bear your children?

Yeah, the people that complain about Angel Wilson's column are the same morons that can't figure out how to flush a toilet.

I witnessed a FIJI fire and didn't call 911 because I hate grecks.

If I found out Paul Restivo was one of my kid's teachers, first I would be glad that my child had all of his shots, and secondly, I would sue the school.

To the perverts who were spying on us while we were tanning today: we know who you are.

Take a picture. It will last longer. Oh wait. You already did.

"Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" is the Macarena of all TV shows.

Legislature should not dictate curriculum standards

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius struck a blow for freedom on Friday.

In response to a 24-13 Senate budget amendment that could withhold up to $3.1 million from the University of Kansas because of the content of a sexuality class, Sebelius said university curriculum was outside the realm of the Legislature's responsibility.

The amendment was the result of complaints from students who had been offended by some of the materials used in a KU course taught by Dennis Dailey, professor of social welfare.

Sen. Susan Wagle, R-Wichita and author of the amendment, was reported in the Lawrence Journal-World as saying that the offensive material included pornographic videos and photos of genitalia.

Although the course description includes a warning of explicit audio and video images, Wagle said she had been told the course was "so far out there and so obscene."

Sen. Nancey Harrington, R-Goddard, agreed. According to the Journal-World, Harrington said the course was "out of step with Kansas values."

The amendment provides that the purchase of material going against "community standards," depicting certain sexual acts, and lacking "serious literary, artistic, educational, political or scientific value" would be grounds for terminating university funding.

Not a bad idea, right? After all, why should taxpayer money fund offensive materials?

The problem is the measure's extremely subjective nature. Who's to say what potentially objectionable materials have sufficient merit to overcome their violations of "community standards?"

Would D.H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterly's Lover" become verboten in Kansas universities? Would Hale Library have to get rid of Masters' and Johnson's tome on human sexuality?

And what about non-sexual objectionable material? If this amendment became law, it could set a dangerous precedent for how to define acceptable educational materials.

For instance, Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn" uses the word "nigger." Most people would agree that this is a highly offensive word. Does that mean the book should be banned from our university?

In "Fahrenheit 451," Ray Bradbury writes of a non-literate society where everyone lives too fast and people get suicidal with alarming frequency. Since that obviously is a bad society, should we take all copies of the book and burn them in the Quad?

The point of education is to help people make choices. The best way to make decisions is after a careful consideration of all options, and that is impossible without knowing all the options. Classes like Dailey's might be disturbing, but they ultimately will help students understand the world around them.

Sen. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, is quoted in the Topeka Capital-Journal as saying that students' "minds are being formed, their morals are being formed."

We don't need this kind of information. And we sure don't need taxpayer support of this."

I would argue the exact opposite.

Learning about new things is exactly what we need. In Kansas, there's a lot of talk about funding higher education. That's because it's important to us. We care about how our young people become equipped to deal with the world.

We must not compromise the integrity of our educational system by allowing the Kansas Senate to limit what students can learn.

Sebelius has suggested a better alternative — that the Kansas Board of Regents take care of problems like this.

There definitely needs to be accountability within each university, and administrators should try to ensure the value of their schools' curriculum.

It's certainly not the Senate's responsibility to determine what is beneficial for students.

The Legislature is, I'm sure, a very devoted and well-meaning group of people. Be that as it may, most of those people simply aren't equipped to deal with educational issues.

Let's hope the amendment gets squashed in committee before it has a chance to do any more harm to Kansas' academic reputation.

If, by some freak miracle, it passes both houses and they manage to override Sebelius' veto, I'm moving to somewhere more open-minded ... like Nebraska.

Roommate selection should account for personality, living habits

The semester is wrapping up, and it is time to begin the process of picking a future home and roommate.

Whether you decide to live in the residence halls, an apartment or a house, the person you choose to live with can make your year full of great memories or a living hell.

There are important personality aspects you should know about your roommate before making the commitment to live with someone. Even if you have been friends for years, there may be some things you don't know, or do know but don't think will be a problem.

Here are some warning signs to look for in a potential roommate that may have you thinking twice before sharing a residence hall room, apartment or home with them.

Promiscuity

It is a good thing to meet as many people as you can. Your college experience should be fun, and students should broaden their horizons.

However, meeting a new person every morning on your way to the shower is probably not what you have in mind. Having a roommate who sleeps with everyone is frustrating.

Aside from being disgusting, your roommate's free-loving attitude may taint your reputation by association. Secondly, when your roommate's taste is questionable, you have to worry about the scum who are in your house and what they might steal.

Cleanliness

Is your potential roommate a neat freak, or does your roommate's car look like he or she is currently living in it? If you are a neat freak and your roommate is a mess, you will have problems.

While you envision dusting once a day and scrubbing the baseboards once a week, your roommate feels it is perfectly normal to leave food in dirty dishes on the counter until it is unidentifiable.

While you feel the trash should be taken out every other day, your roommate is happy to take out the trash once a month. These differences in personality will cause major friction even between the best of friends.

Lifestyle

While you may prefer going to the bars and getting blasted six days a week, your potential roommate may see a Saturday night as a chance to curl up on the couch and read a good book.

When you stumble in with a case of beer and five friends ready for the after party, an argument is sure to follow. Knowing your potential roommate's lifestyle is mandatory. Is he or she a morning person or a night person?

What are his and her friends like? Is there a possibility he or she has a crack addiction? Research, people. There is nothing worse than living with a loose cannon who has to be constantly babysat because of a precarious and dangerous lifestyle.

Attitude

Does your potential living partner have the capacity to be melancholy, depressed or withdrawn? Feeling sorry for someone and living with him or her are two different things.

When you live with someone who is constantly down in the dumps and thinks the world is out to get him or her, it will rub off on you. Look for someone who is well adjusted with a positive outlook on life.

College is something to look back on someday and wistfully sigh as you remember the best times of your life. If you have a suicidal roommate, this may dampen the incredible time you should be having.

Sometimes, no matter how carefully you screen that potential roommate, somehow you end up living with Satan himself. If and when this does happen, kill him or her with kindness and look forward to a day when you no longer have to live in the presence of evil.

Good luck.

Appraisals sent to Riley County residents

Values determine property tax amounts; commercial properties affected

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Property appraisals — which will be used to determine property tax amounts — were mailed Tuesday by the county appraiser's office.

The overall changes in appraisals fluctuated at a more stable rate than last year, Greg McHenry, business specialist from the county appraiser's office, said.

Commercial values were affected more than residential values, he said, because of a recent surge of investments in local commercial properties, such as Home Depot and Target.

Property owners who disagree with the county's appraisal have until May 1 to sign up for an appeal appointment, or can wait until November to practice a payment under protest.

Residential properties are appraised by evaluating market prices of comparable houses, McHenry said. The appraisals are required by state law to be between 90 and 110 percent of comparable market values.

Agricultural-use properties are appraised by a slightly different method, with the house being appraised as a residential property and the land based upon net income potential.

Property appraisals

Property owners who wish to file appeals regarding their change of value notice can call the county appraiser's office or return the tax appeal form included with the notice.

K-State plays a large role in helping county appraisers, McHenry said, by assisting the state in examining soil types to determine the income potential of the agricultural use lands.

The appraised value of a property is multiplied by its assessment rate: 11.5 percent for residential properties and 25 percent for commercial and agricultural-use properties.

The resulting number is then multiplied by the mill levy. A mill is one-tenth of one cent. Riley County residents pay 128.488 mills for each $1,000 of property, County Treasurer Eileen King said.

For example, a residential property appraised at $100,000 would be assessed $1,477.61 in property taxes, she said.

The revenue from property taxes is distributed to local governments, King said, including one-third to school districts, one-third to the city and about one-third to the county. Less than one percent is given to the state government.

residents, voted on Tuesday, according to Rich Vargo, city clerk.

"We were hoping for 30 percent with the extra question and the nice weather, but we only got 21 percent," he said.

All four candidates who ran for the four Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board were elected: Roger Brannan, David Colburn, Nancy Knopp and Randy Martin. Knopp received the most votes at 3,617, and Brannan followed with 3,578 votes.

After a lot of work campaigning, Hatesohl said he was excited for elections to be over.

"I am very relieved the campaign is over," Hatesohl said.

"I feel like I've worked harder, personally, than other people have, and I'm going to be glad to be in bed before midnight or 1 a.m."

Purcell bids readers farewell

SEAN PURCELL

I've never been gifted at saying goodbye. If you know me, I always end a conversation saying something like, "See ya," or "Later."

In my mind, that's better because it still leaves the possibility of a connection at some other time. It's not as permanent.

But nonetheless, it's time to say goodbye.

In two years of working at the Collegian, I have learned so much.

I've learned not to rag on people you come in contact with often. For instance, Matt Siebrandt reads the paper everyday. I had a colleague learn that the hard way.

Also, it's important to give love to the coaches who aren't named Snyder, Wooldridge or Patterson. Their teams matter, too, and if you respect them just as you do the money-making coaches, they will always take the time to sit down with you.

As a sports reporter, you must be educated. Never assume you know more than the reader because if you slip up even a little, your audience will call you on it. The worst feeling in the world is opening the paper and reading about your blunders in the Fourum.

I've learned to always have a plan, but to always be prepared to change it. Part of being a sports reporter is having to expect the unexpected, because that's exactly what you'll get.

As the sports editor last fall, I remember having a day completely planned and ready to go, only to have Coach Bill Snyder change it all by announcing Marc Dunn as his opening day starting quarterback.

Nevertheless, the sports page looked great the next day.

Then there are days when what you planned goes exactly the way you wanted it to. An example of this is the Gameday section for the football game against Southern California last fall. Trojan defensive back Troy Polamalu was Wildcat enemy No. 1 and the nation got to see why as Craig Sager flashed the special section on TBS that night, and K-State got its revenge by winning the game.

Well, it's about that time — time for a few parting words.

To the men's basketball team: Here's hoping it gets better for you next season. Coach Wooldridge, you are the man to turn this program around, and I believe once the wins start pouring in, so will those fans.

To the women's basketball team: Win or lose this season, you are winners to this reporter. I've been around neither a better group of people nor a group so close-knit and so devoted to things that matter more than basketball. Good things happen to good people. Remember this.

To those reading right now: Whether you've read all of my stories or this is your first one, thank you. I have kept every response, both good and bad, to my columns over the years and I've always took each comment to heart. I do what I do for you, so thanks for the feedback.

So now that I've stalled long enough, time to wrap this thing up.

See ya.

Coach Bill Snyder spoke at a press conference on Tuesday and confirmed he was negotiating with the Black Coaches Association in hopes of landing an appearance in the BCA Preseason Classic.

Coach Snyder says he likes Wildcats' 2003 schedule

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The athletic department made it official last month.

The Internet chatter circulating for months was confirmed when the department announced the Wildcats would play at least 12 games in 2003.

However, the final addition to K-State's schedule — Division II foe McNeese State — wasn't quite what Wildcat fans were hoping for.

Those hoping for a more high-profile matchup might still be in luck, though.

At Tuesday's press conference, Coach Bill Snyder confirmed he was negotiating with the Black Coaches Association in hopes of landing an appearance in the BCA preseason classic.

2003 K-State football schedule

Aug. 30	Troy State
Sept. 6	McNeese State
Sept. 13	Massachusetts
Sept. 20	Marshall
Sept. 27	Open
Oct. 4	at Texas
Oct. 11	at Oklahoma
Oct. 18	Colorado
Oct. 25	Kansas
Nov. 1	Baylor
Nov. 8	at Iowa State
Nov. 15	at Nebraska
Nov. 22	Missouri

"I don't know if (the schedule) is complete right now or not," he said. "I know we have 12 games, but we'll see. The opportunities to make a decision won't come for another two weeks the way I understand it now."

Snyder said such a game could take place at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., much like the Eddie Robinson Classic in 2000, even though the BCA was not associated with that game.

The Cats defeated Iowa 27-7 then, but fans mostly remember it for the meat-falling-off-the-bone heat and the early-season injury to star return-man David Allen.

K-State might be encouraged to add another game to benefit its position in the Bowl Championship Series rankings. One element of the rankings, which determine the teams to play for the National Championship, is strength of schedule. With McNeese State and Massachusetts, two mediocre Division II opponents, coming to Manhattan in the fall, the Cats' schedule could be subject to criticism come bowl time.

Adding strength is a concept that doesn't scare players.

"I'm down to play whatever gets us the most publicity and keeps us on top," said linebacker Josh Buhl, who predicted a preseason Top 5 ranking. "If there's 13 games, we'll play. If there's 12, we'll play. If there's 10 games, we'll play."

In the past, Snyder has said that if a team wins, the bowl picture will work itself out, no matter the squad's schedule. Still, offensive lineman Nick Leckey would value the challenge another top-tier opponent would bring.

Not only would it give a boost to the Cats' BCS chances, it would also prime

K-State begins search for Pierce's replacement

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was over before it really had a chance to get going.

In 2002, the K-State linebacker corps, self-proclaimed as the Texas Connection, amassed 324 tackles with a defense that led the Wildcats to an 11-2 finish. Of those tackles, 39 were for losses and nine were sacks.

But Bryan Hickman, Josh Buhl, and Terry Pierce, the junior group known affectionately to Wildcat fans as TNT (Three Nasty Texans), would have only one great season together.

Just days after the Wildcats' 34-27 win over Arizona State in the 2002 Holiday Bowl, Pierce announced he would be leaving for the NFL.

K-State fans were left to wonder what might have been.

"We understand there are a lot of things we need to rebuild," Buhl said. "There are a lot of things we can work on to help us be a better team than we were last year. That's what we're focused on going into the spring."

Getting better will mean finding someone to fill the hole left by Pierce at middle linebacker.

K-State has several players capable of stepping in.

Sophomores Matt Butler and Ted Sims will take snaps at middle linebacker this spring, as will sophomore transfer Marvin Simmons.

Simmons transferred from Compton (Calif.) College where he was selected as a first-team All American after originally signing with USC out of high school.

Hickman said Pierce is irreplaceable but added he will

Maloney reaches base safely in 58 consecutive games

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Baseball is a game full of streaks — impeccable records like the 2,632 consecutive games played by Cal Ripken Jr., or Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak in 1941.

K-State senior Pat Maloney has his own streak. He has reached base safely in 58 consecutive games.

Maloney said the streak is something he doesn't even think about.

"I don't think about it at all, really," he said. "It's something that's kind of a coincidence. I could go 0-for-5 and get on on an error or get on by a walk. It's something that doesn't really go through my head that much. I'm just trying to get on base."

Coach Mike Clark compared the streak to New York Yankee Robin Ventura's 58-game hitting streak when he played at Oklahoma State in 1988.

"That's amazing," Clark said. "It ranks right up there with the hitting streak that Ventura had when he was playing, and some of the great streaks that K-State has ever had. It says a lot about his consistency, his work ethic and what he brings to the game."

The streak stretches all the way back to March 26, 2002, when Maloney went 1-for-3 with a home run and an RBI against C.W. Post. Maloney said he didn't realize he was even in a streak until a few weeks ago.

"I really didn't even know it until I sat out a game," Maloney said. "I sat out with my ankle sore, and somebody said to me that one of my streaks is still intact, even though the other one wasn't."

The other one was an amazing streak of games in which Maloney trotted on the field with the starters. Maloney has been a mainstay in the Wildcats lineup since his freshman year in 2000, and in 2002, he started all 55 games, 46 of them coming in left field.

Against St. Peter's on March 16, however, Maloney found himself on the bench at the beginning of the game for the first time since his freshman season. He had started in 152 consecutive games for K-State prior to the matchup with the Peacocks.

Maloney answered with a simple "yeah" when asked if he could have started the game, but said Clark made a good decision.

"I was disappointed," Maloney said. "But coach made the right decision. I was

"I don't know if (the schedule) is complete right now or not," he said. "I know we have 12 games, but we'll see. The opportunities to make a decision won't come for another two weeks the way I understand it now."

Snyder said such a game could take place at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., much like the Eddie Robinson Classic in 2000, even though the BCA was not associated with that game.

The Cats defeated Iowa 27-7 then, but fans mostly remember it for the meat-falling-off-the-bone heat and the early-season injury to star return-man David Allen.

K-State might be encouraged to add another game to benefit its position in the Bowl Championship Series rankings. One element of the rankings, which determine the teams to play for the National Championship, is strength of schedule. With McNeese State and Massachusetts, two mediocre Division II opponents, coming to Manhattan in the fall, the Cats' schedule could be subject to criticism come bowl time.

Adding strength is a concept that doesn't scare players.

"I'm down to play whatever gets us the most publicity and keeps us on top," said linebacker Josh Buhl, who predicted a preseason Top 5 ranking. "If there's 13 games, we'll play. If there's 12, we'll play. If there's 10 games, we'll play."

In the past, Snyder has said that if a team wins, the bowl picture will work itself out, no matter the squad's schedule. Still, offensive lineman Nick Leckey would value the challenge another top-tier opponent would bring.

Not only would it give a boost to the Cats' BCS chances, it would also prime

K-State begins search for Pierce's replacement

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was over before it really had a chance to get going.

In 2002, the K-State linebacker corps, self-proclaimed as the Texas Connection, amassed 324 tackles with a defense that led the Wildcats to an 11-2 finish. Of those tackles, 39 were for losses and nine were sacks.

But Bryan Hickman, Josh Buhl, and Terry Pierce, the junior group known affectionately to Wildcat fans as TNT (Three Nasty Texans), would have only one great season together.

Just days after the Wildcats' 34-27 win over Arizona State in the 2002 Holiday Bowl, Pierce announced he would be leaving for the NFL.

K-State fans were left to wonder what might have been.

2003.

"We understand there are a lot of things we need to rebuild," Buhl said. "There are a lot of things we can work on to help us be a better team than we were last year. That's what we're focused on going into the spring."

Getting better will mean finding someone to fill the hole left by Pierce at middle linebacker.

K-State has several players capable of stepping in.

Sophomores Matt Butler and Ted Sims will take snaps at middle linebacker this spring, as will sophomore transfer Marvin Simmons.

Simmons transferred from Compton (Calif.) College where he was selected as a first-team All American after originally signing with USC out of high school.

Hickman said Pierce is irreplaceable but added he will

Maloney reaches base safely in 58 consecutive games

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Baseball is a game full of streaks — impeccable records like the 2,632 consecutive games played by Cal Ripken Jr., or Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak in 1941.

K-State senior Pat Maloney has his own streak. He has reached base safely in 58 consecutive games.

Maloney said the streak is something he doesn't even think about.

"I don't think about it at all, really," he said. "It's something that's kind of a coincidence. I could go 0-for-5 and get on on an error or get on by a walk. It's something that doesn't really go through my head that much. I'm just trying to get on base."

Coach Mike Clark compared the streak to New York Yankee Robin Ventura's 58-game hitting streak when he played at Oklahoma State in 1988.

"That's amazing," Clark said. "It ranks right up there with the hitting streak that Ventura had when he was playing, and some of the great streaks that K-State has ever had. It says a lot about his consistency, his work ethic and what he brings to the game."

The streak stretches all the way back

to March 26, 2002, when Maloney went 1-for-3 with a home run and an RBI against C.W. Post. Maloney said he didn't realize he was even in a streak until a few weeks ago.

"I really didn't even know it until I sat out a game," Maloney said. "I sat out with my ankle sore, and somebody said to me that one of my streaks is still intact, even though the other one wasn't."

The other one was an amazing streak of games in which Maloney trotted on the field with the starters. Maloney has been a mainstay in the Wildcats lineup since his freshman year in 2000, and in 2002, he started all 55 games, 46 of them coming in left field.

Against St. Peter's on March 16, however, Maloney found himself on the bench at the beginning of the game for the first time since his freshman season. He had started in 152 consecutive games for K-State prior to the matchup with the Peacocks.

Maloney answered with a simple "yeah" when asked if he could have started the game, but said Clark made a good decision.

"I was disappointed," Maloney said. "But coach made the right decision. I was

College basketball | Doherty out at UNC
Matt Doherty won't return as North Carolina's basketball coach next season, two sources close to the program told The Associated Press.

The school scheduled a news conference Tuesday night, but it was unclear whether Doherty would resign or be fired with three seasons left on a contract that pays him $855,000 a year.

Doherty failed to make the NCAA tournament in two of his three seasons.

Boxing | Tyson, Lewis likely on same card
Mike Tyson and Lennox Lewis may fight in the same ring June 21 — just not against each other.

Talks are under way for the two heavyweights to appear in separate fights of a heavyweight doubleheader, perhaps in Buffalo, N.Y.

Possible opponents for Lewis include No. 1-ranked Vitali Klitschko, Kirk Johnson or Buffalo's Joe Mesi. Tyson's fight would be against someone along the lines of his last opponent, perhaps a fading Oleg Maskaev.

Members of a U.S. Olympic Committee task force met for the final time before they present their recommendations for the restructuring of the troubled organization, the New York Times reported Tuesday.

Task force co-chair Bill Stapleton wouldn't reveal the details of Monday's meeting of the USOC Governance and Ethics Review Task Force, which met in Manhattan, the newspaper said.

Stapleton was cited as saying only that the main components of the recommendations included the trimming of the USOC's 123-member board of directors and its 21-person executive committee.

The task force will present their recommendations before the full board of directors on April 11-13 in Fort Worth, Texas.

MLB | Torre: Jeter out at least 1 month

Derek Jeter won't learn the extent of his shoulder injury until Thursday.

Jeter dislocated the shoulder in the third inning of New York's season-opening 8-4 win over Toronto on Monday and will have an MRI after the team arrives in Florida for a weekend series against Tampa Bay. The Yankees hold spring training in Tampa and have extensive facilities there.

Jeter will go on the 15-day disabled list and could be sidelined for at least a month, manager Joe Torre said.

MLB | Piazza's suspension 1 game shorter

Mike Piazza's suspension for charging the mound in spring training was reduced to four games, and the New York Mets' All-Star catcher will start serving the penalty Wednesday.

The decision to shorten the ban by one game was made Tuesday by Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer. He heard Piazza's appeal Monday after New York's season-opening 15-2 loss to the Chicago Cubs.

The Mets were off Tuesday. If games are played as scheduled, Piazza would be able to return to the lineup Sunday against Montreal.

MLB | Hernandez settles criminal charges

Montreal Expos pitcher Livan Hernandez settled charges Tuesday that he swung golf clubs at a 65-year-old man.

Under the agreement, prosecutors will drop felony aggravated assault and battery on the elderly charges if Hernandez attends anger management classes, performs 50 hours of community service and donates $500 to charity.

Hernandez, who was traded to the Expos from the San Francisco Giants on March 24, can wait until the offseason to meet the terms. He will be allowed to travel freely with the team.

Tennis | French Open purse increases

The winners of this year's French Open will earn more money than last year, but women will still make less than men.

Total prize money is going up 6 percent to $14.2 million, the French Tennis Federation said Tuesday. The men's champion will earn $915,180 and the women's champ will earn $892,300.

The French Open, like Wimbledon, pays more prize money to men. At the other two Grand Slams, the U.S. Open and the Australian Open, the pay is equal.

Football | Ticket renewal available online

K-State football fans now have the option of renewing their season tickets online through www.kstatesports.com.

After receiving their 2003 renewal forms this week, customers now are able to log on and follow step-by-step instructions to purchase their seats online.

Tickets officials said once the football renewal process is completed, single-game tickets will be made available to the public for the 2003-04 season.

CELTIC CALLING

BirdHouse series to present traditional Irish performance

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clancy is an important name in Celtic music.

Famous during the '60s folk boom, Bobby Clancy was a key member of the legendary Clancy Brothers.

Aoife (pronounced Eefa) Clancy is the daughter of Bobby Clancy, and she hasn't skipped a beat from where her father left off, said David Kameron, co-organizer of the BirdHouse Performance Series. He said the deep connection to Irish music is very apparent in Aoife's music.

"She performs nice, high-octane Celtic music," Kameron said. "A lot of times you get upbeat tempo, in-your-face music, or you'll get soft Irish ballads. She works in both. You'll get some of the tormented Irish ballads and then some jigs."

Kameron said Celtic music performances have the highest fun factor due to the energy that is produced. He said Clancy will have something that everyone can relate to.

"One thing about her is the elemental component she brings," Kameron said. "You can enjoy it, and it will stand the test of time. That's what Irish music does."

Kameron said Manhattan is fortunate to get a musician like Clancy.

Clancy said she is now playing at a listening room called the Old Settlers Inn in Moundridge, Kan. She said she enjoys the atmosphere at Moundridge and wanted to play in a similar environment.

"It was highly recommended that I play in Manhattan," Aoife said. "I've done outdoor festivals, but I love the intimate settings."

"You can connect with the audience. It's not like I'm way up here and the audience is way down there. You're on the same level."

Clancy said she hopes everyone will enjoy the show and maybe it will inspire someone to buy a CD. But she said her favorite part about a show is when she has made connections with a member of the audience.

"One time after a show an audience member came up to me," Clancy said. "I was so glad because he said that he wasn't sure if he wanted to come or not, but then he said that he was glad he did because I had been able to make him happy."

"I like it when someone comes up and tells me that I had moved them. If I made them happy, it makes me feel good."

Having quality musicians performing at BirdHouse has become a tradition, said Steve Martini, co-organizer of the BirdHouse Series. He said they are proud to bring in good folk artists, who may not normally play in Manhattan, to a great listening atmosphere.

"If you come to BirdHouse, you'll have fun," Martini said. "Of the 65 to 70 shows over the past years, I can't think of one concert that wasn't top-notch. It's a great deal and a good opportunity."

Martini said audience members should expect two and a half hours of good music, filled with good songwriting and good entertainment by a quality artist. He said it is a great atmosphere because it is intimate, smoke-free and serious about music.

"A person should come to see great live music," Martini said. "Some people come to get entertained, but we have season ticket holders who come to every show because they know that BirdHouse puts on a good show."

The broad appeal is what makes this performance so attractive, Kameron said. He said there have been several successful Celtic musicians including The Corrs, Enya and Riverdance. He said there is a great tradition in Celtic music, and it is great for all ages.

"We saw an opportunity to bring Aoife Clancy here, and we jumped at it," Kameron said. "They [Moundridge] said that we would really want to do this."

"Celtic music does well for BirdHouse. It's something fresh and new. We get to make some noise and have fun."

'American Idol' finalist Corey Clark booted after arrest revealed

"American Idol" finalist Corey Clark has been dropped from the FOX series because of an arrest last fall at his family's Topeka home.

The 22-year-old singer withheld information about the arrest which, had it been known, "might have affected his participation in the show," FOX said in a statement Monday. The statement didn't include a comment from Clark, and FOX declined to give information on how to contact him.

Warner Bros. eliminates image of star flashing peace sign in ads

"What a Girl Wants" is to avoid making a political statement. Print advertisements for the teen comedy originally featured a photograph of star Amanda Bynes wearing a tank top with an American flag on it and flashing the peace sign as she stands between two British royal guards.

PERSONALITY PROFILE

Kelly Welch

Assistant professor of family studies and human services

1. What would you like to be having for dinner?

"Either a cheese, hand-tossed Pizza Hut pizza or turkey, mashed potatoes and corn."

2. What is in your CD player right now, or who is your favorite musical artist?

"The soundtrack from 'Chicago'."

3. What kind of car do you drive?

"A Jeep Cherokee Laredo, because after four minivans, it's not a minivan."

4. What was the last movie you saw. Why did you see it?

"Actually, it's on the Hallmark channel this week. My favorite movie of all time. 'The Thornbirds' — a great mini-series about a priest who falls in love with a woman he can't have. The old forbidden love thing."

5. What is your must-see TV show?

"OK, don't laugh. 'Little House on the Prairie' because it centers me. It makes me wish I lived during that simpler time in history."

6. What is your favorite place to eat?

"Of all places — a little sidewalk cafe in Cozumel, Mexico. The food is insanely good, and I love the atmosphere of the place. I love watching people."

7. Who is your idol and why?

"I don't like the word idol. I do have my heroes, though. My husband of over 20 years, Dave, because he's such a calming presence in my life and is such an incredible person. My four children because each of them taught me something about myself."

8. What is your favorite alcoholic drink?

"I don't drink."

9. What is the craziest thing you have done in college?

"I should probably plead the fifth on this one. Actually, I think it's probably when I was on my first date with my future husband. I was dancing on the table, and my dress caught on fire. It apparently caught his attention. This is all I should probably confess to."

10. Have you ever cheated on a test?

"Yes, in the eighth grade. Math test — got busted and from that day on was afraid to even let my eyes leave my paper. Back then, teachers really didn't care about political correctness and could say or do anything they wished for the sake of discipline. It was a life lesson I really didn't want at the time. And my dad followed up on the life lesson once he found out. So trust me, the point was clearly made."

AMERICA AT WAR

Forces closer to Baghdad, red zone

Chemical protection suits worn by lead Army units

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

American forces fought their way to within sight of the Baghdad skyline Wednesday, and officials claimed the destruction of a pair of once-menacing Republican Guard divisions. Iraqis discarded their military uniforms by the roadside to hide their identity.

Bombs shook the capital as Army and Marine armored columns took separate, converging paths toward the city from the south. "The dagger is clearly pointed" at the heart of Saddam Hussein's regime, Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks said.

The rapid advances brought thousands of troops within the red zone — an imaginary line on the map near the capital where Iraqi use of weapons of mass destruction is most feared. Troops in some lead Army units donned chemical protection suits, and Marine helicopter pilots were ordered to be prepared to do so.

The military campaign unfolded as Pfc. Jessica Lynch, a 19-year-old prisoner of war freed in a daring nighttime rescue, was flown to Germany for medical treatment.

But the joy over her freedom was tempered by word that the special forces who rescued her also found 11 bodies. "We have reason to believe some of them were Americans," Navy Capt. Frank Thorp said.

Increasingly, there were signs that Iraqi civilians were

Commander for Ft. Riley announced

Brig. Gen. Hardy named by defense department

By Karl Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brig. Gen. Dennis Hardy has been named new commander of Fort Riley.

Hardy is currently the director of Force Management for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff of Operation and Plan in the Pentagon.

He will succeed Col. Frank Helmick, who has been interim commander since Lt. Gen. Thomas Metz was reassigned to Fort Hood, Texas, in February.

Hardy has previous combat experience during Operation Desert Storm, and he also worked on some peacekeeping missions in Bosnia.

The Department of Defense decides which general will be suited best for each position, and they are assigned new commanders every year or two, Christie Vanover, deputy media relations officer, said.

"The army is very flexible," Vanover said. "There is a change of command all the time. It is a routine that our soldiers are accustomed to."

It has not been announced when Hardy will report to Fort Riley.

Ft. Riley soldier dies

Sgt. Butler's vehicle hit by grenade in attack

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Fort Riley soldier was killed in combat April 1 in a hostile fire incident, the Defense Department confirmed today.

Sgt. Jacob Lee Butler, 24, of Wellsville, Kan., was assigned to Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment.

"According to the Department of Defense, his vehicle was hit by a rocket-propelled grenade in Assamawah, Iraq," Christie Vanover, deputy media relations officer, said.

Joe Butler, Jacob's twin brother, said his family was notified by the military at 11:45 p.m. Tuesday. Butler's parents, Cindy and James, live in Wellsville, a town about 40 miles southwest of Kansas City, Mo.

"I just know for a fact that he died fighting for our freedom and doing something that he loves to do. That's really all I can tell you at this point in time," Joe Butler said.

He said his brother joined the Army in 1998. He was stationed at Fort Hood, Texas, and later transferred to Fort Riley, Joe Butler said.

Vanover said there usually are memorial ceremonies for soldier's deaths, but no information is available at this time.

Speaking on behalf of the family, Staff Sgt. Sheldrick McNeal of Fort Leavenworth said, "The family doesn't want to talk right now, and they don't have a statement."

Universities strive to offer comparable presidential salaries

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's a 24/7 kind of job. Meetings, fund-raisers, university events, budget issues and journalists pestering them with interviews make a university president's job all-consuming.

"I'm the only one that lives on campus, and there are pluses and minuses to that," President Jon Wefald said. "The minus is that I'm on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week, but I enjoy it. No day is the same, and I work with the faculty, alumni and businesses who contribute to the university. It varies a lot, and I wouldn't still be here if I didn't enjoy it."

That level of consumption in work is not unusual for university presidents, and it is part of the reason that salaries have shot up in the past five years, said Joe Rowson, director of communications for the University of Nebraska.

The qualifications for such a demanding position have put universities in competition to hire prime candidates, Rowson said.

"There's a serious competition to find qualified individuals because the job is extremely complex and demanding, particularly at a major public university today," he said.

Wefald, who makes $209,820 per year and receives a university-provided house, made a sum comparable to University of Nebraska President L. Dennis Smith before 2001. Smith's salary was set at $209,780 in 2000.

After consulting firm Ernst & Young was commissioned by the University of Nebraska to study presidential salaries, Smith's pay was boosted

First witnesses called in former liquor store owner's trial

Cross-examination to continue today

By Crystal Welborn and Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The prosecution presented an opening statement Wednesday in Kent Dean's jury trial.

Dean, former owner of Dean Retail Liquor, is being charged with aggravated criminal sodomy and two counts of aggravated restraint stemming from an alleged incident from January 2002 in Manhattan.

Jury selection took place Tuesday and Wednesday with 49 potential jurors called and 38 questioned before 12 were selected.

During Assistant County Attorney Brenda Jordan's opening statement, she alleged that the woman was incapable of giving consent to the defendant.

After Jordan delivered her opening statement, Pedro Irigonegaray, Dean's attorney, requested a meeting of counsel in Judge David Stutzman's chambers.

Irigonegaray then informed the court that he would wait until after the state had presented its case before delivering his opening statement.

With that, the state called its first witness, the alleged victim.

The woman said that prior to meeting Dean in an Aggieville bar, she had consumed two margaritas at her house and two mixed drinks in various Aggieville bars, beginning at 11:45 p.m.

"We weaved in and out of bars," she said.

About two hours later, both women stopped at Fat's Bar around 1 a.m., where they met Dean.

At this point in the evening, the witness said she remembered hearing the last

Kite designed by art professor currently set on display at Smithsonian Museum

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Robert Grame, assistant professor of art and K-State graduate, designed a kite to enter in the Smart Papers Graphic Design Kite Contest, he had no idea just how far it would take him.

His design is now displayed in the Smithsonian Museum in Washington, D.C., as part of the 37th Annual Smithsonian Kite Festival. Between then and now, quite a few things happened to get Grame's work to the Smithsonian.

"Design is really conceptually based, and that's what the judges were looking for — something that had a strong idea along with a well-delivered visual voice."

Robert Grame
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF ART

The competition was rigorous, he said, going through a finalist and semi-finalist competition. There were 500 entries, 32 of which were accepted as finalists. There were 10 grand finalists.

For his design, Grame chose a red kite with origami shapes on it, and considered natural objects.

"My first sketches started with what would inspire a kite in the first place," he said. "I started to think about birds and butterflies."

He thought about how a lot of kites get destroyed and what could be done to reuse them, he said.

"The submission came through one of our most premiere magazines, Print Magazine, so it's a significant competition," he said.

The judges — Milton Glaser, Judy Kipich and Ann Willoughby — are notable figures in the design world, Grame said.

"The stature of the judges is really meaningful in terms of my industry and what we do," he said.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Robert Grame, assistant professor of art, sits in front of a screen showing a piece of his graphic design work. The actual piece was displayed in the Smithsonian Institution.

"The idea is to combine origami with the original kite so that once the kite crashes, you could cut it up into square shapes and make origami out of it," he said.

There were a few requirements for the competition, Grame said.

"The kite had to be under 10 pounds, and it had to have armature — it had to look like it could fly, but it didn't actually have to fly. All the kites were displayed as if they were flying."

Grame got an invitation to go to a reception for the finalists at the Smithsonian to see his art displayed.

"Unfortunately, I didn't have the opportunity to go," he said.

The competition is very prestigious, he said.

"It is one of the biggest exhibitions I have ever been a part of," he said. "It was an honor to even get to the semifinals and even more to get to the finals."

"Design is really conceptually based, and that's what the judges were looking for — something that had a strong idea along with a well-delivered visual voice."

Michael Balluch, freshman in open-option, schedules an appointment for a student to be picked up by the Disabled Student Services van. Balluch works about eight hours a week driving students to their classes and delivering their tests.

Student drives shuttle van on campus

System can help disabled students

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Road rage isn't usually a problem for Michael Balluch — his passengers probably are grateful.

Balluch, freshman in open-option, works on campus as a shuttle driver for Disabled Student Services.

"It can be frustrating when you're stuck at a crosswalk and you've got a lot of riders who all need to be in class at the same time. You don't want them to be late," he said. "But I'm pretty easy-going, so I get over it pretty quickly." Balluch began driving the shuttle last fall and works two four-hour shifts each week. He is paid minimum wage.

"I could use more hours and more money, of course," he said.

Balluch also works three days each week at KSU Printing Services to compensate for the lack of available hours as a shuttle driver.

During his time driving the shuttle — a full-size van with a hydraulic lift and raised roof — Balluch said he usually is able to find some free time to work on his homework.

CAMPUS JOBS

The Collegian takes a closer look at students who earn their college cash on campus.

Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services, said the shuttle service began in 1979 with a car and only a few passengers. Now, the shuttle's van operates 10 hours per day, five days per week and picks up hundreds of passengers each semester.

Students with permanent or temporary disabilities are allowed to ride the shuttle, which runs only on campus, she said.

"I think administrators, in their wisdom, decided to do it because there is no public transportation," Holden said. "This is our way of trying to bridge that gap for students who need transportation."

Without a shuttle system for disabled students, Holden said, many would not be able to attend the university. Even a broken leg could force a student to miss several classes and possibly drop out of school. The shuttle system helps eliminate this problem, she said.

The shuttle system is paid for by the Office of Institutional Advancement, Holden said, so no student fees are used.

The shuttle service works with students' schedules, but also is on call in case the students need to go to the K-State Student Union Bookstore or if they get out of class early, Holden said.

Usually, though, Balluch said the shuttle route is fairly regular. He said he never feels rushed while driving.

"It's just like any other job," he said.

But Holden said she is impressed with Balluch's work ethic.

"He's very, very dependable," she said. "That's important. Whether it's raining, sleeting, snowing or a beautiful day, these students are out there waiting."

Voters allow hospital sale

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County residents voted in support of a proposal to terminate and close Memorial Hospital, transferring ownership to Mercy Regional Health Center in Tuesday's elections.

About 85 percent of voters supported the proposal, with 4,985 voting yes and 842 voting no.

"This means the county can get out of the hospital business," County Commissioner Bob Newsome said.

The county, Memorial Hospital and Mercy agreed that, pending the results of the vote, Mercy would be allowed to purchase Memorial Hospital for its appraised value, $1,950,000.

The money from the sale would be used to improve county buildings, Newsome said.

Newsome said the agreement will eliminate tax money going toward the hospital, while still maintaining strong regional health service.

Mercy has been leasing the property at 1105 Sunset Ave. for the past seven years, and the board of directors has until mid-2006 to decide if they want to purchase the property, said Ann Harts, vice president of planning and business development.

Harts said she expects the board will decide to purchase the property, unless it puts too much financial strain on the health center.

The building that houses Memorial Hospital would continue to be used for health service, and there would not be any noticeable changes to the services it currently offers, Harts said. The main difference would be changing its designation from a county hospital, she said.

"We will continue using it to fulfill our mission," she said. "It is an integral part of providing health care services."

call in the bar.

"I might have felt intoxicated, but I didn't feel very drunk," she said.

The woman said that Dean had asked the two women if they wanted free drinks and invited them to his liquor store.

At the liquor store, she said that Dean asked what they wanted to drink, and she requested vodka.

After taking one shot of vodka and finishing the remaining alcohol in her friend's shot glass, the woman said she and her friend went to look for matches for a cigarette in a different room, while Dean went into his office.

While both women were searching for the matches, the witness testified she took bottles of alcohol and placed them in her friend's purse. However, Irigonegaray said that Dean caught the woman stealing through a security camera located in the store.

Soon after, the witness said she heard a noise, and before she knew it, both women and Dean were in a small room, in close proximity to one another.

"We were all next to each other, shoulder to shoulder," she said.

The next thing she could remember, the witness said, was that she woke up on the floor with her pants around her ankles.

"I felt scared about finding my pants around my ankles," she said. "I wanted to find my friend and get out of there fast because I didn't know what happened."

The woman said she put her pants on and found her friend in the a neighboring room, where the witness said she and Dean kissed.

"I was drunk and drugged, and it happened," she said. "It was foggy — I don't remember me kissing him or him kissing me."

"Everything was weird and disoriented. The events just happened without my control."

At 4:30 a.m., the witness said she and her friend began to walk home.

"I was very fuzzy, very disorganized and drunk."

While at home, the woman said in a report that she noticed that her black cotton pants had been turned inside out and that her underwear was shifted over, with the waistband around her left leg and one of the leg openings around her waist.

The trial will resume at 9 a.m. today at the Riley County Courthouse with a continuance of Irigonegaray's cross-examination of the witness.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES

By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled...or have already failed...you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight...or loses weight...the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.

2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating...how often and at what times during the day...causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.

3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

TO THE POINT Wefald's loyalty to K-State is commendable

President Jon Wefald deserves all the kudos that come his way.

Even though he receives the lowest salary of all Big 12 university presidents, he remains loyal to K-State. He has received offers at schools such as the University of Minnesota, where he was chancellor before coming to K-State – still, he's stayed in Manhattan.

Since he arrived in 1986, enrollment increased from 17,000 to more than 21,900, and K-State added 1.6 million square feet of new university buildings. Wefald is a very visible figure on campus – he's not just a name in the newspaper. He supports athletics and academics – it's hard to recall a game where he wasn't cheering or a conversation in which he didn't mention how many scholarships K-State students have earned.

But he's not just a cheerleader – he makes pressing decisions every day.

Although we cannot determine Wefald's salary, we commend him and appreciate all he does for the amount he receives.

Why should I cheer for KU, just because they are Big 12? They don't cheer for K-State football. They would rather us lose, so there is no way. KU sucks.

I hope the Harvard Crimson girls are not at the same competition as the Classy Cats this week, because I really thought they were quite a bit better when they danced at the Cats game last weekend, than the Classy Cats have been all weekend, except for during the Band is Hot Song. That one is OK.

To the girl in my politics class, with the orange shirt, blue pants and brown high heeled flip flop things, your outfit looked really dumb.

I think in one of my previous lives I was a mighty king, because I like people to do what I say.

Today I accidentally stepped on a snail on the sidewalk by our house, and I thought I too am like that snail: I build a defensive wall around myself, a shell, if you will. But my shell isn't made of a hard protective substance. Mine is made of tin foil and paper bags.

Lindsey, considering that 1967 was called the Summer of Free Love, I would date spring break morphing into a orgy of sex and love back to them, being 35 years ago. Where have you been? And yes, people who choose to engage in irresponsible behaviors will pay the price, but, as one person once said, too much of a good thing, can be terrific.

I was just following a taxi and I watched it run two stop signs in a row.

I'd love to see what Lindsey Praechter learned to knit while she was on spring break.

I just saw a real estate sign on Wefald's lawn.

Hey, let's face it, if I drove a Chevy, I probably would need a disabled hang tag.

Cowgirl up. Hmmm, does that mean you are too tough to study, or just too dumb to cheat?

GREYING THE SOCIETAL ZEBRA

Everyday life losing clear distinctions, constantly gaining contradictions

If you commit a crime, there is a set punishment. When you read a book in English, you read from left to right. It is as straightforward and as black and white as the pages and ink with which it is printed. But that is where the buck stops, consistency vanishes and common sense becomes quite uncommon.

In a society where our foundation is built on black and white, where according to Sir Isaac Newton, "every action has an equal and opposite reaction," it sometimes seems hypocritical to dabble into the exception.

It's beyond me how a "fat chance" and a "slim chance" are the same thing, but a "wise man" and "wise guy" are considered opposites. Walking fast isn't considered jogging slowly, and it's perfectly normal to drive down a parkway and park on a driveway.

We long to bask in the exception but live in a world dominated by black and white distinction. To preserve our sanity, we thus prescribe to a doctrine of "close enough" to justify our exceptions not as exceptions, but as just a shade off the rule, effectively greying the black and white zebra that we call society to the point where eventually there will be no zebras, simply brown horses.

But that's what we want, even though we love to contradict what we do and say. People need structure and consistency in their lives and those that don't have any are a mess. While those who revel in formulation and organization long for something more, something sporadic and spontaneous.

Always wanting what we have but needing what we don't have. This is the price of being human. Living in the contradiction and living for reliability is what we define as a life with exhilaration and excitement.

But even what we define as desirable changes with the tides and wind and ultimately comes full circle back to where we each began. What we define as opposites becomes more and more alike each day. Republicans now are "compassionate conservatives," which means they now only want to hold onto most of their money, so a little can be shared.

And with pushes like "faith-based initiatives" and other sweeping legislation, one can only wonder which party is acting more conservative. Or moreover, which party is which anymore. Should we condense both parties and call them the Republicans or the Dem-icans?

We live in a world where new trends are simply old trends revived, where the buzzword "diversity" is just another way for everyone to be more like everyone else. Our advancement as a society is based wholly on how fast and small we can get our computers. People find it odd if your name doesn't conform to the societal norms of Adam, Mike or John. The homogenization of society is in full swing.

America supported Iraq with weapons in the 1980s in an eight-year war against Iran. America trained many of the so-called terrorists we are fighting against today. And everyone agrees that the "four out of five dentists think that this toothpaste rocks" ad is a little shady.

But that's the problem – that everyone agrees. You can even agree to disagree.

"It's beyond me how a 'fat chance' and a 'slim chance' are the same thing, but a 'wise man' and 'wise guy' are considered opposites."

Education curriculum misrepresented in column; block classes more beneficial to future teachers than columnist attests to

Editor,

I admit, I did laugh. I even joked around with classmates about it. But the more I thought about it, the more upset I became with Paul Restivo's column April 1 titled, "Education curriculum fails to make content meaningful."

As a fellow Block One student, I laughed when Restivo mentioned the use of the "L-word."

However, after reading the column a second time, I stopped laughing. When other professors asked me if they should be concerned about the class, I became upset. And when I thought about how upsetting it would be to have a student complain about my teaching styles in a public manner without talking to me about it first, I became sad.

I am sad because of the way this column was written. Restivo seems to think that our professors are "driving us to alcoholism," which certainly is not the case. In any event, what does this statement say about our college and university as a whole? Does this mean that everyone who takes a class in the College of Education are doomed to a life of regret and pain for picking the wrong major? Certainly not.

I don't know about Restivo, but I did not choose to be a teacher because of the professors. Instead, I chose my major after contemplating how much I enjoy helping others grow and learn. The professors in charge of the Block One classes have at least done a good job of helping me figure out the best way to help others, and as the saying goes: it is better to have helped one person than none at all.

I am sad because Restivo is not receiving as much from this class as I. From my own experience, I have learned many things – and none of them have anything to do with what alcohol I should drink to get the largest buzz before heading off to class. Instead, I have learned about the different learning styles of my students, what past teachers have done so that I may learn from their mistakes to give my students the best opportunities, and have even watched as my fellow students applied what our professors taught us in order to, yes, show us the correct way to introduce ourselves.

I am sad because of the ignorance Restivo showed toward the class in general. While he might think that Block One is there so we can learn what to say to our future students, the actual purpose can be found in our Block One syllabus. This states that "The preparation of teacher candidates at Kansas State University is anchored in a foundation" within which are elements regarding "foundations, students and learning, instruction, learning environment, and professionalism."

Even the description of each separate class in the K-State Undergraduate Catalog has no mention of discussing what we as teachers should say in every situation that we may encounter. Instead, they mention the coverage of "principles," "strategies" and "practices." Yes, we will learn about our content areas (English, business, etc.) in depth, but not until we have advanced to Block Two. As for the subjects Restivo would like to learn about ("dealing with a student death"), there are some things no one can teach us.

It is our duty to arm ourselves with as much knowledge as we can, whether that be from books, lectures, or teachers who have been in similar situations.

Most of all, I am sad I must be associated with other future educators who are not as enthusiastic about learning as I am. The first comment Restivo made about how to make the class better was dead on. He should have "alert(ed) the professor" to what he was feeling.

All of the professors in Block One are enthusiastic and understanding and would be more than willing to work with us to make our learning experience better. Restivo might think it is just a waste of time, but it gets a lot more accomplished and is a lot cheaper than sitting around and drowning our sorrows with a couple of beers.

Sincerely,

Mindy Pauly | SENIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

O'Hara, Stryker take office tonight

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body President-elect John O'Hara and vice president-elect Travis Stryker will be sworn in at tonight's Student Senate meeting.

Senate Vice Chair MaryElizabeth Kasper, senior in secondary education, said the presidential pair will be sworn in at about 7 p.m. in the Big 12 Room.

"It's going to be pretty simple, really," she said. "They'll raise their right hands and take an oath to uphold the responsibilities of office."

Kasper said that although the inauguration normally would have occurred by now, this year is different.

"Because John is the current Student Senate chair, we have to elect a new chair before he becomes president," she said. "He can't hold two offices at once."

After student senators elect the new Senate chair, Student Body President Zac Cook and Vice President Todd Kohman will, respectively, swear in their newly elected replacements.

O'Hara said the pair will begin their first week in office by reviewing applications and choosing cabinet members.

"Hopefully, we'll have a cabinet in place as soon as possible," he said. "We want to be able to select the best and brightest to be part of the team. I hope to have more applications than there are positions available."

O'Hara said the pair also has begun work on several of their campaign issues.

"We'll be meeting to determine the goals for next year and discuss a few of the immediate concerns that we have regarding some issues," he said.

Some issues include a smoking policy, student wages, diversity programs and allocation of funds from tuition revenue. O'Hara said they also hope to develop a task force for wait list procedures.

"We want to be able to select the best and brightest to be part of the team. I hope to have more applications than there are positions available."

John O'Hara
STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT-ELECT

Stryker said he also will spend the next couple of weeks reviewing applications and conducting interviews for vacant all-university positions. All applications are due April 9.

"I will be filling all positions for at-large, executive branch positions," he said. "Any current student can apply for the positions."

Stryker said he will begin next semester by serving on the educational opportunity fund committee — a committee that helps support under-represented student programs. He said he also will serve as a liaison between student government and the SafeRide program.

"It's a continual project I will be working with," he said. "We'll be hiring a SafeRide coordinator, and working with that person will be very important through the summer and into next year."

Until then, the pair will be hard at work.

"Basically, we're going to continue to have meetings with administration regarding tuition for next year and strategies for implementing what students want to see happen," O'Hara said.

He said they hope to meet with students having any concerns and plan to visit student organizations for feedback during their term.

"Travis and I are just really excited for the upcoming year," O'Hara said. "I know there will be many challenges, but I feel confident we can address those challenges and hopefully make the university a better place."

Prisoner of War rescued

Forces locate U.S. soldier in hospital; 11 corpses found

By Doug Mellgren
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASIRIYAH, Iraq — An American flag folded across her chest, Pfc. Jessica Lynch left Iraq on a stretcher Wednesday after U.S. commandos, acting on a CIA tip, rescued the prisoner of war. But the operation also brought sad news — 11 corpses were found, some believed to be Americans.

Lynch, a 19-year-old Army supply clerk, arrived at a U.S. air base in southwestern Germany on a C-17 transport plane late Wednesday for treatment at a U.S. military medical center. Her condition was not disclosed, but U.S. officials in Kuwait said she was believed to have broken legs, a broken arm and at least one gunshot wound.

She was captured by the Iraqis more than a week ago after her maintenance unit made a wrong turn and was ambushed in Nasiriyah. Twelve other members of her unit also were feared captured; five of them are officially listed as POWs.

Following an intelligence tip about Lynch's whereabouts, U.S. special operations forces made their way behind Iraqi lines and seized Lynch from the Saddam Hospital late Tuesday, American officials said.

Crew's mission clear for regattas

Rowers to compete in San Diego Crew Classic

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's fitting that K-State's rowing team is competing on Mission Bay in San Diego this weekend.

Their mission? Find consistency.

"Sometimes we're on, sometimes we're off," junior Courtney Franssen said. "We're not a consistent team yet."

Inconsistency was the culprit last weekend on Tuttle Creek Reservoir. The Wildcats jumped to their best starts of the season only to see those advantages slip down the stretch. The Cats finished third behind Iowa and Clemson in each race.

"The first 1,000 meters was executed exactly how we wanted it," Coach Jenny Hale said. "They weren't very good at executing the next part of the race, though."

Senior Carissa Land found it difficult to place blame.

"The boat just died, basically," Land said. "A lot of it is mental. We just have to decide as a boat that we really want to push it."

That mental block must be overcome when the Wildcats compete in the San Diego Crew Classic this weekend in what is arguably the most prestigious regatta in the nation.

"The San Diego Crew Classic and the Head of the Charles are the most exciting races you can go to," Franssen said. "It's a completely different atmosphere."

The Crew Classic is celebrating its 30th anniversary this season, boasting more than 150 rowing programs and 3,400 athletes. Some of the top collegiate programs in the nation will be represented, and nearly 20,000 spectators are expected.

That doesn't intimidate the Wildcats, however.

"We've been going for three years, so they have a sense of having been to big regattas," Hale said. "It's not something we worry about in terms of exposure anymore."

The Wildcats have had mixed results in past trips to San Diego. In 2001, the varsity eights finished fourth in the Cal Cup Grand Final. Last year, K-State won its heat only to finish fourth once again.

"To be quite honest, we've raced very well in the heats, but we haven't raced well in the final," Hale said. "Finishing fourth was not as successful as our goal."

K-State's goals might have to change this weekend as the Wildcats step up to the highest level — the Jessop-Whittier Cup.

"They'll be seeing some boat speed they've never raced before," Hale said. "It's a totally different level of racing."

"Our goal will be to make the finals. That's a pretty challenging goal because you're racing against boats that are always in the finals of the national championships."

That fact isn't lost on Franssen, either.

"The Jessop-Whittier is something big, because we're racing with the big dogs," she said. "Washington and Washington State are huge names in rowing. It's kind of intimidating, but it's obvious we have to step it up."

K-State will be seeing some familiar foes in Texas, Duke and Clemson. The Wildcats hope to avenge early-season losses to each, Land said.

"We know what they can do," she said. "We've gotten a lot faster the last couple of weeks. We want to get out there and show them what we've accomplished."

While the Wildcats' expectations aren't necessarily to win, Hale said she's eager to see how her team competes.

"It's a multi-regional, cross-regional race," she said. "You get a much better idea of what you're capable of. It gives us a good indication of how we stack up."

COMEBACK KID

K-State's Eli Roberson runs the ball against OSU during last season's home game at KSU Stadium. Roberson enters spring practices as K-State's No. 1 quarterback.

Roberson experiences success through challenges

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the third consecutive season, Eli Roberson entered spring practices as K-State's No. 1 quarterback. But for Roberson, the ride to the top has been a bit jarring.

"People know I've been down and been out, and they've still stuck with me," Roberson said. "Through bad times and good times, I am going to go out there."

He suffered through a disastrous 2001 season while competing with Marc Dunn for the starting job.

Still, last spring he was the top dog in a heated race.

He lost the starting position early in 2002, but Roberson roared back against Southern California and established himself.

Dunn wouldn't start another game but applied rabid pressure throughout the season.

"It's very beneficial to have someone there who is extremely capable. It goes back to Marc Dunn — he just never gave Eli enough breathing room," Coach Bill Snyder said.

While Dunn never managed to get his feet under him, he did keep Roberson from reverting back to his 2001 form.

"Eli responded to that in such a way that says 'I'm not going to take a day off, a play off, a step backward here.'"

Roberson didn't settle at improving his on-field performance, though.

Each spring, the players elect representatives who will promote a strong work ethic, leadership and attitude.

This year he got the nod. An honor well-deserved, Snyder said. He said it's a testament to the hard work that Roberson has shown on and off the field.

"When he continued to make that steady increment in performance level, our players became more receptive, and that encouraged him to become more productive as a leader," Snyder said.

But if the pressure and competition provided by Dunn was the anecdote to Roberson's 2001 ailment, who will be the drive behind Roberson's senior campaign?

A likely candidate is Jeff Schwinn, a senior from McLouth, Kan.

Schwinn proved his worth during the season as a solid third-string quarterback. He averaged 7.4 yards on 13 rush attempts and 32 yards per completion.

Roberson Stats

	passing				rushing
	percent	ints	yds	TDs	yds	avg.	TDs
2000	43.5	2	119	2	168	5.1	0
2001	39.7	8	855	4	806	4.5	9
2002	52.0	4	1,580	7	1,032	5.1	16

While appearing in only three games, Snyder has seen enough to be impressed.

"Jeff Schwinn is chomping at the bit," Snyder said. "He wants to be there, and he believes in himself in a humble way."

For Roberson, that means another competition for the top spot. He said he's spent enough time in the last four years fighting to get where he is, and he certainly doesn't plan on letting up now.

Even though Roberson has been here before, he said things are different.

Before, he wasn't considered a leader.

The added responsibility won't go to his head, though.

"Right now, I'm here to get this team to a national championship, and we are just going to work hard and try and get that goal," he said.

Cats search for ways to break 8-game slide

Coach hopes day off will bring change to struggling K-State

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If there's one word to describe an eight-game losing streak, it would be "tough."

Coach Mike Clark, along with first baseman Tim Doty and third basemen Ty Soto all agreed — an eight-game slide is tough on a team.

"It's tough," Clark said after an intrasquad scrimmage Tuesday. "That's why I wanted them to have fun today. We let some things go that we don't normally let go. They got competitive, and a lot of good things happened today."

Doty echoed his coach's thoughts. "It's pretty tough," Doty said. "We'll break it. It's just tough when you come in after the game. We're just like, 'Man, we lost again.' If we just stick with it and play hard, we'll come out of it."

Tough also was the first word out of Soto's mouth when asked about the slide. But Soto said K-State's focus is now on Oklahoma State, whom the Cats face this weekend.

"It's been tough," Soto said. "You come out to win every day. Unfortunately, it's been eight in a row. We're just going to come out on Friday against Oklahoma State and just try to get that one. We're just focused on that one game. Everything else we'll deal with later."

Clark allowed his players a day off Monday, and when they returned to the field Tuesday, the scrimmage was scheduled. Clark said a day off can really be a remedy for a struggling team.

"That helped, too," he said.

"To get away sometimes, when you're in a rut or things aren't going your way, it's nice to get away. Coming back, I wanted them to have fun and enjoy coming to the yard, enjoy being at the yard and get their edge back. That's something we're going to have to do gradually. These guys, when they get their edge back, are going to be something to deal with."

Soto said the break came at a perfect time in the season.

"It was nice," Soto said. "It's been a long haul. Spring break tournament, the Nebraska series after that, and then a couple of games after that. I think we needed it. I think it will be good for us. It was nice to kind of get our mind off the game for a little bit."

Clark said it all comes down to pitching, an area where K-State has struggled this year.

"Pitching," Clark said. "It's 70 percent of baseball, and when that's not good, it puts a lot of pressure on you. (Kevin) Melcher and (Eric) Rollins showed us the blueprint to being successful on Sunday. Hopefully, the other guys will pick up on it, and we'll go out and have a much more competitive start."

Leadership plays a role on any team, but when a team is in a slump like K-State is, it's even more important. Doty said he, along with other Wildcat veterans, will have to step up if the Cats are to get back to winning.

"We just have to keep everybody focused," he said.

"Make sure nobody jumps ship, and make sure nobody starts getting down on themselves. Just stay up on yourself, be confident and keep playing hard."

MLB | Royals start 2-0

Joe Randa hit a tiebreaking two-run homer in the seventh inning as the Kansas City Royals beat the Chicago White Sox 5-4 Wednesday for their first 2-0 start in 24 years. With the score 3-all, Angel Berroa reached on a throwing error by shortstop Tony Graffanino, and Randa homered off Rick White (0-1).

MLB | Deliberations begin in Puckett case
A jury began deliberations Wednesday in the trial of Kirby Puckett, accused of dragging a woman into a restaurant bathroom and assaulting her.

Jurors deliberated for about 5 1/2 hours without reaching a verdict. Hennepin County District Judge Stephen Swanson sequestered them at a hotel for the night, and they were scheduled to reconvene Thursday morning.

Golf | Burk's lawyers ask for override

Martha Burk's lawyers asked a judge Wednesday to override the sheriff's decision prohibiting her from demonstrating at the front gate of Augusta National during the Masters.

The request comes 10 days before Burk plans to protest at the club because of its all-male membership. Burk, chair of the National Council of Women's Organizations, wants thousands of golf fans to walk by her demonstration.

But Sheriff Ronald Strength says the closest Burk can legally protest is a 5-acre site just less than a half mile from the gate. A city law revised last month gives Strength broad authority to regulate protests.

College basketball | Wooden finalists

Final Four participants Nick Collison of Kansas, T.J. Ford of Texas, and Dwyane Wade of Marquette were among the John R. Wooden Award finalists announced Wednesday.

Hollis Price of Oklahoma, and David West of Xavier are the other two contenders for the player of the year honor, which will be presented April 12 at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Ford won the Naismith Award last month.

MLB | Bowa disciplined

Philadelphia manager Larry Bowa was suspended for one game and fined by the commissioner's office Wednesday for his role in the teams leaving their dugouts during a spring training game.

Bob Watson, baseball's vice president of discipline, announced the penalty before the Phillies played Florida on Wednesday night. The suspension is scheduled for Thursday's series finale.

Youth sports | PSA aimed at sportsmanship

USA Hockey released a public service announcement Wednesday aimed at curbing inappropriate conduct by coaches, parents and fans at youth games.

The 30-second TV spot originally was part of a campaign called, "Relax, it's just a game," which was launched by the Canadian Hockey Association in November.

USA Hockey executive director Doug Palazzani said it is "imperative to curb the increased pressure that some parents and coaches — albeit the minority — place on children who participate in youth sports."

Tennis | McIver earns Big 12 award

Junior Hayley McIver nabbed Big 12 Tennis Player of the Week recognition Wednesday.

McIver, winner of four straight matches and seven of her last eight, helped K-State to wins over conference opponents Iowa State and Missouri last weekend.

Against the Tigers, the 6-foot lefthander clinched the match with a three-set win over MU's Mary Barry.

With the wins, McIver improved to 18-9 overall and 5-1 in conference play.

Women's basketball | Banquet announced

K-State's women's basketball team will be honored at its annual postseason banquet at 2 p.m. on April 12 at the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Reservations can be made through the women's basketball office at 532-6970 through Monday.

Tickets are $25 for adults and $10 for children younger than 12.

Forum participants discuss topics from domestic industries to foreign policies

By Tristan Hinderliter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The buffalo industry, voter turnout and U.S. foreign policy were among topics discussed at Wednesday afternoon's open-mic forum "Will You Speak?" in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

About a dozen students participated in the event.

Forum organizer Vy Bui said the purpose of the forum was for students and faculty to be able to speak their minds about whatever interested them and be accountable for what they were saying.

Abby White, freshman in animal science, said she grew up on a buffalo ranch in Saline County and was speaking to promote the buffalo industry.

"A lot of people don't know much about buffalo, but it really is a healthy meat," she said. "It tastes a lot like beef."

White said buffalo meat can be purchased in large grocery stores, on the Internet or from the White Buffalo Ranch in Saline County.

Jason Heaser, sophomore in political science, said he was surprised at this year's low voter turnout of 12 percent for the Student Governing Association elections.

"The Student Governing Association here at Kansas State has an immense amount of power and has a great impact on the daily lives of students everywhere," he said.

Heaser said he is from Minnesota, where people have always been proud of their political activism, he said.

"Coming from that sort of background, I was sort of surprised that voter turnout here at the collegiate level at Kansas State was so low," Heaser said.

Grade school children should not have to say the Pledge of Allegiance every morning, Mike Cody, sophomore in open-option, said.

"Why are we making children pledge their allegiance to the country? They're not captive here," he said. "I don't think that there's any reason that we should try to do that."

Cody also said the state of schooling in United States is "shameful."

"Public schools are a joke," he said. "I went to public school, and in my elementary school, I graded my own test and I made my own spelling lists, and I had to sit away from the other kids because I wasn't part of the group."

"So they put me in special education and gave me no education. In junior high and high school, I took advanced courses. And in college, I have bad grades because I don't care and I like to be involved," Cody said.

Student Body President Zac Cook participated in the forum, discussing preemptive strikes, "the foreign policy initiatives taken by the U.S. as of late."

He said the movie "Minority Report" contains a good example of a preemptive strike.

"When you think about that as a policy action, that's basically what the movie's based on — policing by preemptive strike," Cook said. "Basically, we are saying that if we have infinite amount of knowledge, we can stop every crime before it happens."

"And now, with our foreign policy, we believe that we have great intelligence and that based on that we can determine what the pattern of events will be with the information we have," he said.

Cook said this policy should be followed with caution, if at all.

Jason Heaser, sophomore in political science, speaks out on getting the student body motivated about voting in Student Governing Association elections. Evan Semón | COLLEGIAN

"Even the day you have total intelligence, and you think you know down to the moment what's going to happen, that'll be the one time it's wrong. I don't know that putting humanity through suffering like we do with war and large scale policing is justified."

The forum was sponsored by a new student organization, Challenge Central, and facilitated by David McCandless, student coordinator and senior in political science.

SALARIES | Schools' needs, budgets determine salary disparities

competitive, Rowson said. "When this study was done, we discovered that the salary issue has become more serious, and you have to be willing to get more competitive with salary than a lot of people think is appropriate," he said. "It is absolutely essential in this marketplace right now."

While the University of Texas tops the public Big 12 schools in presidential salaries at $800,000 per year, K-State maintains the lowest presidential salary in that same category.

In a market where university presidents can rake in so much cash, why isn't K-State offering a more competitive salary for its president? Wefald said it's a combination of factors. While one is the limitations of Kansas' budget for the position, another is his dedication to K-State, he said.

"Over the past 10 years, I've had many opportunities to become the president of other major universities and said no," Wefald said. "I love K-State, and I'll stay here for the duration. Salary is not the only driving force."

"There's something special at Kansas State. We have a superb faculty and excellent students. It's also in a nice community. I like it here. My wife likes it here. We love Kansas State, and we like living in Manhattan."

Joe Moore, who works with Missouri's board of curators, was quick to point out that the disparity in presidential salaries is caused mostly by the very different needs of each school.

Wefald said each university looks for different qualifications in a president because of these differences.

"Every institution is looking for different things," he said. "There's no predictability at all. It was preferred that college presidents have a Ph.D. in the recent past, but even that's changing."

"Now some schools are looking for an entrepreneur. At many elite private colleges, they're looking primarily for someone to raise funds. It's very different from state to state and university to university."

With the University of Kansas' chancellor making $219,420, Wefald said Kansas has traditionally paid lower salaries. Its universities can't be expected to keep up with larger institutions with more funding, such as the University of Texas, he said.

That doesn't change the fact that it will be difficult for K-State to offer a qualified individual a competitive salary after Wefald leaves.

"When Kansas State looks for a different president, whenever that might be, they may find they need to enhance the salary considerably," he said. "But whether it's 1990 or 2003 or 1950, salaries here have always been the lowest."

eager for the arrival of invading forces. Some smiled and waved as Marines rolled through Nasiriyah in tanks and other military vehicles.

There were moments of humanity, as well, in the 2-week-old war. In Nasiriyah, American snipers summoned help for an Iraqi woman in labor in a pickup truck. Navy Hospitalman First Class Kyle Morris delivered a healthy baby and named her "America."

"It was a pretty cool way to start the day," he said.

Despite the gains on the battlefield, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and others cautioned that some of the toughest fighting of the military campaign might lie ahead, seeking to dampen speculation that the war might end quickly.

Iraq insisted the battlefield was tilting its way. "Victory is ours," Saddam said in a statement issued in his name.

But that was increasingly at odds with the accounts offered by American military commanders as well as reporters covering frontline Army and Marine forces swiftly advancing on Saddam's capital.

"Our guys are able to see the skyline. That's how close we've gotten," said one military official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The official said the plan was to begin to form a cordon around Baghdad and press the regime to surrender.

Failing that, there was no word on when – or whether – forces would enter the city of 5 million.

Following days of heavy airstrikes, artillery barrages and skirmishes designed to weaken Republican Guard divisions, Army units swept toward Baghdad from the southwest, past battered Iraqi forces near Karbala. The troops moved through a gap west of the city. Special forces earlier seized control of a nearby dam, erasing fears that Iraqis would blow it up and cause a flood that could have been a disaster for the American forces.

Advancing Army forces captured a bridge over the Euphrates River at Mussayib after defusing explosives left by retreating Iraqis. There was little resistance.

Southeast of Baghdad, near Kut, Marines took a key bridge as they advanced. "Now we're on his (Saddam's) side of the street," said Lt. Michael Belcher as troops crossed to the western side of the Tigris River.

Brooks told reporters that the Baghdad Division of the Republican Guard, which was positioned near Kut, has been destroyed. At the Pentagon, Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal said both the Baghdad Division and the Medina Division, near Karbala, were no longer credible forces.

The four remaining Republican Guard units, as well as the Special Republican Guard, also have suffered losses, officials said, but not as extensive. Baghdad also is defended by a paramilitary force estimated at 6,000 and 8,000.

One Iraqi tore off his uniform in an attempt to hide his identity. He wasn't quick enough, and he was seized.

He was not alone in attempting to escape notice. Troops rolling through Nu-maniyah, 40 miles southeast of Baghdad, saw the road littered with discarded Iraqi military clothing.

Despite the American success on the battlefield, officials warned of difficult fighting ahead.

"We are not expecting to drive into Baghdad suddenly and seize it," McChrystal said.

It was an odd departure from recent days, when Iraqi troops were hitting American supply lines, forward U.S. units were stopped in place and former generals were openly questioning the American battle plan. Then, reporters were peppering Rumsfeld with questions about the effectiveness of the invasion.

Lynch's hometown in West

Virginia celebrated her release. An American flag was folded across her chest as her stretcher was loaded for the flight. Officials who spoke on condition of anonymity said she was suffering from broken legs, a broken arm and at least one gunshot wound.

Two of the 11 bodies were found in a morgue in the hospital where she was being held, while the nine others were buried outside the building, Brooks said.

While most of the day's military action was south of Baghdad, there was fresh bombing around Mosul, in the northern part of Iraq.

And a contingent of U.S. troops set up at a large airstrip in nearby Irbil, a facility that has not been used for more than a decade.

Special forces troops have been working openly with Kurdish troops opposed to Saddam, and the Iraqi leader issued a clear warning to them during the day.

"I advise you not to rush and do something that you'll regret," it said.

In Najaf, American commanders said Iraqi forces had taken up positions inside the Ali Mosque, one of the world's most important Shiite shrines. Brooks said American and British forces had declared holy sites as "no targets" to be fired on only in self-defense.

Navels, tongues most popular body parts for piercing

By Katie Lane
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ears, lip, genitals. What connects all of these? Piercings.

Josh McCullough, Manhattan resident, decided Tuesday afternoon to get his tongue pierced for the second time.

"It's something different. It's kind of a spontaneous thing. I decided about 10 minutes ago," McCullough said. "Tattoos and piercings are addicting."

Earlier that morning, his girlfriend, Heather Hancock, also pierced her tongue. She said she agreed that once you get your first tattoo or piercing, it's hard to stop.

"My first tattoo was three days after I turned 18. I just wanted to do something my parents didn't have control over. Now it's just addicting," Hancock said. "One of my friends got hers done last week. And it's weird because I thought I'd never get it done."

Hancock said this probably would be her last piercing, but she is leaving the door open for tattoos.

"I probably won't get any more piercings, but probably more tattoos — maybe it's my artistic nature," Hancock said. "You can have too many piercings when it gets to a point where it affects whether you can get a job when you're older."

Pain can be a consideration when deciding to get a piercing, but McCullough said his piercings didn't hurt.

"The first couple of days suck because you can't eat anything," McCullough said. "I don't think it hurts, but it's weird when they clamp your tongue."

When considering piercing his tongue, cost wasn't an issue, McCullough said.

"It's pretty cheap. It's less than tattoos. Tattoos can get expensive," he said.

Marilyn Wathke, piercer at Stray Cat Tattoo, said that after people are pierced they usually think it was less painful than they expected, but Hancock said she felt the opposite.

"It hurt more than I thought it would," Hancock said. "If you take care of it, you shouldn't have a problem. When I got my belly button pierced, I took care of it every day."

After piercing for seven years, Wathke said she doesn't see many things that are out of the ordinary.

"For the most part, nothing is unusual anymore. I've done a piercing on a guy's neck and on the back of arms," Wathke said.

Kim Ward, piercer at Fine Line Tattoo, said they don't offer surface piercings because of the possible consequences.

"They heal bad, and sometimes they don't heal. We just do the most common piercings," Ward said.

Piercing someone's genitals isn't uncomfortable for Wathke, she said.

"I'm not squeamish of other people, so it doesn't bug me. The best thing to do is to ask questions and find someone you're comfortable with," she said.

Navels and tongues are two of the most popular piercings, Wathke said.

"Most people do it because they see it and they like it. I get more navels in the summer and more tongues in the winter."

Ward also said that navels and tongues are the most popular piercings at Fine Line.

"The girls like the belly buttons because they think they're sexy," Ward said. "There is some sexual attraction to the tongue, too."

Besides pain, there are other possible problems with piercings, Wathke said. The level of training of the piercer and the technique are important factors to consider when getting a piercing, she said.

"The biggest problem I see with gun piercings is improper placement and people not knowing how to take care of it afterward," Wathke said.

Heather Hancock, sophomore in fine arts, tries to relearn how to lick a sucker after having her tongue pierced. She agreed that once you get your first tattoo or piercing, it's hard to stop.

K-State graduate to perform own brand of slam poetry

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Slam poet Taylor Mali graduated with a master's degree in English from K-State in 1993, and he has become a well-known artist in the slam genre.

Mali, who now lives in his native home of New York City, has won the national poetry slam twice and been featured in the 1996 documentary, "Slamnation." He returns to K-State on Friday for the first time in 10 years.

Mali has taught at the grade school, middle school and high school levels and puts an emphasis on teaching in his performances.

Here's what he had to say about tomorrow's performance:

Q: How much new material do you bring to performances?

A: I'll do a couple of pieces I've performed only once before. I always try to include newest poems, so I'll probably read one that I'll write on the plane out there, but maybe not. I like for every reading to be a cross section of greatest hits and new material.

Lately I've been experimenting with a loop station that lets me create an infinite number of loops, so I can do group pieces written for more than one voice. Since I don't have a little P.A. at home, the only time I get to practice that is when I perform, so I might try some improv with that while I'm there.

Q: How did your experiences at K-State affect you?
A: I grew as a person and a poet during my time in Kansas. I learned a lot about America in my three years there.

I had a black Mustang convertible and every weekend I'd pick someone new and drive for an hour in one direction as the sun was setting.

I was at K-State from 1990 to '93, so it was during the last Gulf War. Now every time I think of Manhattan, I think about invading Iraq, but I also think about the golden Flint Hills at sunset and discovering my love of teaching.

I learned in the process of going to school that what I really loved was teaching. I found that out through teaching composition courses. Now I have a mission statement to create 1,000 new teachers. One of the ways I judge my success is how many people I can claim responsibility for getting into the teaching profession, and so far I'm up to 18.

Q: So are you as arrogant as "Slamnation" made you look?

A: Paul Devlin has said that documentaries work better with a villain, so I think I was obliging him in being the villain. I'm very competitive and that sometimes disguises itself as arrogance. I'm a much nicer person than that made me out to be.

I'm performing with Dan Ferri next weekend, so we've patched up our differences, but we still spar or wrangle sometimes.

Taylor Mali

When: 8 p.m. Friday

Where: Forum Hall

Price: Free

Mali also will participate in a career and mentoring panel at 3:30 p.m. Friday in Banquet Room A of the K-State Alumni Center.

Slam poet Taylor Mali performs at 8 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall.

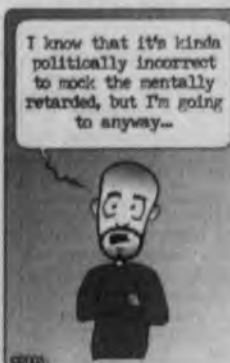

Q: What are you looking forward to about coming back to K-State?

A: This is the first time I've been back in 10 years, and it means a lot to me.

I loved my time in Manhattan. I'll be in town Thursday, and I think I'll wander Aggieville Thursday night and soak up pathos.

FIRE FETISH

Fire 'vixen' keeps working at craft despite recent crackdown

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some kids just don't listen to their parents when they tell them not to play with fire.

Veronica the Fire Vixen was one of those kids. When she dances, not many people turn away. She often performs in costume she has designed and sewn herself to reveal plenty of her petite, flexible body. That, combined with the Betty Page hair and swinging balls of fire, makes her pretty eye-catching.

"It doesn't seem so hard to entertain people when a cute girl in a bikini is lighting herself on fire," she said.

But that doesn't mean it's all as easy as she makes it look.

Veronica has been performing with fire in Kansas City, Mo., for the last four years. She said she taught herself the art after a close friend refused to teach her how to breathe fire.

"He wouldn't teach me unless I could do a trade by teaching him a different fire art," she said. "I didn't have anything to trade. One of the things about firebreathing is that there's this unspoken rule that you don't teach someone else without a trade."

Veronica said she began teaching herself to breathe fire and after she got it down, she moved on to other aspects of the arts. She then started to swing poi and twirl flaming batons.

Now she is working with toys that have an exotic appeal to the general public such as firefans and firefingers. She also has taken up grinding. And while it isn't specifically a fire art, it does involve sparks shooting from a metal bikini bottom when she runs a metal grinder over it.

So why does she do it?
"If you know what you're doing, it's fun," she said. "It's a way of letting out aggression for me, and it's something different."

"People always enjoy watching a good show, and when people got interested, I learned that I could be booked for shows and could actually entertain people in large groups."

Of course, all that changed after the rock band Great White's pyrotechnics fire spread and burned down a Rhode Island nightclub.

"It ruined everything, and it will never be the same," Veronica said. "Whenever a bar owner hears fire artist or fire breathing now, they automatically think of the Great White show and what happened, and they don't want that risk at their bars."

Veronica said she hasn't been able to perform inside any club since the incident. While it has been an obvious inconvenience, it has forced her to become more aware of fire safety and laws that regulate the use of fire indoors.

The fire arts are regulated when performed indoors. In the city of Manhattan, Fire Chief James Woydziak said fire performance would be regulated much like pyrotechnics at a concert.

Each indoor performance would require a permit that would involve a site inspection to determine if enough space would be available for the performance. Woydziak said confined spaces, such as bars in Aggieville, probably wouldn't have enough room for such a performance.

"We regulate candles, so we would want to make sure any flame-producing device is safe," he said.

Veronica said she is registered on performers.com, and since the Rhode Island fire, things have changed.

The site's administrators have asked all fire artists to provide proof of first-aid certification, $1 million performance insurance and material safety data sheets for all fuels used in their performances.

Veronica said she is working on meeting those requirements, and she understands the seriousness of the situation.

"I can understand from the bar owners' point of view and the fire marshals'. But when the band put fire bowls too close to a wall covered with flammable material, it's just stupidity."

"From my point of view, I've been performing a long time, and I take all precautions. I make sure people stay away from the fire bowls, make sure the ceiling isn't too low, and place the fuel away from fire."

Veronica performed before the incident without permits, but now fire departments are cracking down on any indoor flames.

And though she bears a small scar on her chin as a testament to the danger of fire, Veronica said she hasn't had too much trouble with the flames.

"I've heard of others having a problem or two, but the only thing bad that has happened to me was when I was under an air conditioner and when it came on, it blew fire from my tongue down to my chin, where the scar is now."

"One of the things about firebreathing is that there's this unspoken rule that you don't teach someone else without a trade."

Breaking down the craft

Playing with fire

Here is a quick rundown of the different aspects of the fire arts.

Poi: Pronounced like toy with a P, poi dancing involves swinging a flaming ball at the end of a wire. This also can be performed with LED lights or glowsticks at the ends of ropes for those who wish to avoid fire.

Twirling: This involves setting the ends of a baton on fire and dancing with the twirling stick. Think in terms of a pyromaniac marching band leader.

Fire eating: This is basically all the stuff you see a fire performer do with their mouths such as putting out a torch with one's mouth or setting one's tongue on fire.

Firefingers: These are small torches that fit on the ends of the fingers.

Firefan: A large fan made from metal wire with rope wicking at its ends.

Blow-out: The most dangerous aspect of fire performance is fire breathing. It involves blowing highly flammable liquid into a flame to produce a large fireball.

Feeding the fire

Fuels vary in the things they are used for in the fire arts. Here is a list of a few basic fuels and how they are used.

Slow-burning fuels, also known as cool fuels: A slow fuel is a fuel that will burn for a longer duration at a lower temperature, but the resulting flame is duller and less impressive. The flash point, or lighting temperature of slow fuels is higher, so they are often more difficult to light, especially in the wind.

Kerosene: This fuel often is used for poi swinging, baton twirling and other toys in outdoor events because of its unpleasant smell and sooty residue. Though pure kerosene is non-toxic, additives such as naphtha and benzene, which are found in most commercially sold varieties, make the kerosene toxic.

Lamp oil: While lamp oil is more difficult to light than kerosene, it is often used as an indoor substitute for kerosene because it lacks the unpleasant smell, smoke and residue that come with kerosene. This also is a toxic substance.

Fast-burning fuels, also known as hot fuels: A fast fuel is one that burns shorter, brighter and at a hotter temperature. The flash point is lower, so these fuels are more volatile and often more dangerous to work with.

White gas (Coleman fuel): This common hot fuel is easier to light so is sometimes used for lighting purposes in outdoor areas. It evaporates quickly so it is clean to work with, but since the resulting flames are larger, it is important for poi performers to accommodate with extra room when they use it in a performance.

Mixes: Sometimes fire performers mix kerosene or lamp oil with a fast fuel such as Coleman fuel or charcoal starter to create a fuel that is easier to ignite and will last about as long as a slow-burning fuel.

Veronica said she began teaching herself to breathe fire, and after she got it down, she moved on to other aspects of the arts. She started to swing poi and twirl flaming batons and actually balance fire sticks on her tongue.

AMERICA AT WAR

Troops battle at airport

Suicide raid targets tanks

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Army forces launched a nighttime attack on Saddam International Airport just outside Baghdad on Thursday and fought running battles with Iraqis along the city's southern fringes. "A vise is closing on the regime," President Bush told cheering Marines stateside.

Some front-line units went on heightened alert against the threat of chemical weapons, ordered to wear rubber boots and suits despite temperatures that soared into the 90s.

There was fierce fighting in Kut, to the south of Baghdad, where desperate Iraqis armed with rifles charged tanks in a suicide raid. "We mowed down" the attackers, said Lt. Col. B.P. McCoy.

Despite declarations that further tough fighting lies ahead, the nation's top military official indicated there may not be an all-out battle for Baghdad. Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, suggested isolating members of the old regime in the capital - cut off from the rest of the country - while an "interim administration" is put in place to begin work on a post-war government.

A meeting to organize an interim government could be held in Iraq within a week, a senior Pentagon official said Thursday night.

For the first time in the war, large parts of Baghdad lost electricity. The cause was not known. Myers told reporters at a Pentagon briefing that Americans had not targeted the power grid.

Tracer rounds lit the night sky and artillery boomed near the airport a few miles from the heart of Saddam Hussein's capital. Army units encountered little resistance along the airport road, their convoy passing dead Iraqi soldiers and piles of discarded military uniforms.

At one stage, it appeared

They were there to protest the protest.

They held their signs high, they booed in response to the speakers' anti-war rhetoric, and from a second-floor window in Seaton Hall, "Have You Forgotten," by Darryl Worley repeatedly played to the crowd outside the K-State Student Union.

"These people are saying war is not an option," said Aaryn Grauer, freshman in family life and consumer science, "but we have a dictator that is killing people and hiding weapons. War is necessary in this case."

While they were not there for the same cause as the K-State Coalition for Peace and its supporters, these protesters said they had every right to be there - and every right to express an alternative view.

"I don't agree with them," Grauer said. "We need to be here, and we need to be loud. Our views are just as important."

Those views, many including that by protesting the war, they are not supporting the troops in the Middle East, were expressed by several pro-war supporters in the audience that filled the Union Plaza at noon Thursday.

"There are a lot of uneducated people who are getting their facts mixed up," Brande Donoho, sophomore in history, said of the speakers. "Our troops are there for a reason, and we support that reason. It is not that we like people dying, but the soldiers are supporting these people's freedom of speech, and they are insulting them by protesting."

Phillip Cox, junior in landscape architecture, said he attended in support of the soldiers and of America.

They call the war unjust, illegal and the murder of innocent civilians.

Anti-war protesters gathered at noon Thursday in the Union Plaza with signs, noisemakers, drums and prepared speeches.

"This is not a war against terrorism but a war of terrorism," Paul Youk, senior in sociology, said. "I think there is insufficient evidence of an Iraqi threat to peace. There's no reason to go to war. All the reasons we are told we are going to war are fake."

The K-State Coalition for Peace sponsored the "walk-out" rally and open forum, which included scheduled speakers and a time for students to express their opinions.

"I am a supporter of peace," said Amy Jones, senior in family services and human services. "I believe there are other ways to solve conflict."

Jones is against war in general, but this war is even more difficult to justify, she said.

"I think it's been manufactured," she said. "I believe Saddam Hussein is an evil person, but I don't believe it was something of imminent danger. It was something President Bush conjured up."

A group of Manhattan High School students marched down Anderson Avenue carrying signs as they made their way to the free-speech zone.

"I am sure we are going to be suspended and grounded for a long time from our parents, but it's worth it," Chloe Beeman, MHS freshman, said. "It is worth expressing our opinion and letting people know

Quaife elected as Senate chair

Senate inaugurates O'Hara, Stryker

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New student senators had a busy agenda Thursday night as they elected their first student leaders for the 2003-04 Senate term.

Senators elected Laurie Quaife as the new Senate chair, defeating Jason Heaser and Ben Procter with a total of 34 votes.

Quaife has served in Senate for the past three years and this past year has served as the allocations chair.

"I'm really excited having the chance to have a good year in Senate," Quaife said.

Quaife said she would like to see a variety of improvements in Senate, namely the terms served by senators.

"If we could run our terms in August through May, we wouldn't have this break and I think we could improve the way Senate works," she said.

Senator Katie Crow said that Quaife's work this past year as the allocations chair gave her the benefit in leadership.

"She has amazed me with her tremendous organization, enthusiasm and her professional manner in the way she treated everyone around her," Crow said.

Senators also selected Julie Quackenbush as the Senate vice chair, Sam Meier as the Faculty Senate representative, and Hannah Mueldener as the intern coordinator.

Quackenbush defeated former vice chair Vicki Connor, Meier defeated senator Christine Baker, and Mueldener defeated Senator Anne Bianculli.

Procedural error in Dean case results in mistrial

Mistrial ruling sets criminal sodomy case back on 2nd trial day

By April Middleton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A mistrial was declared in the trial for Kent Dean, a former Manhattan liquor store owner.

Dean was charged with aggravated criminal sodomy and two counts of aggravated restraint, which stemmed from an alleged incident in January 2002.

Pedro Irigoneraray, Dean's attorney, said the mistrial was declared because of a procedural error.

It wasn't just one thing, he said, it was several things that made the court decide it wasn't fair to continue the trial.

The mistrial was declared at the end of the second day of testimony in the case.

The second day of the trial began with the council meeting in Judge David Stutzman's chambers for three hours. When the trial resumed after a lunch break, the judge gave instructions to the jury to disregard any previous references to or presence of cocaine in the case.

Irigoneraray continued cross examination of the prosecution's first witness, one of the alleged victims. He questioned the witness on discrepancies in testimonies and her statement to the police.

He questioned why she had originally withheld information from the detective after the incident.

The witnesses testified Wednesday that she 'sexually kissed' Dean, after a time she says she has no memory of, that she awoke from to find her pants around her ankles.

She didn't tell the Owning pets proves to be more than wayside decision for K-State students

By Jessica Packard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Adopting a pet may be the perfect solution to loneliness for many college students.

However, Lynn Schumacher, shelter control supervisor for the Manhattan Animal Shelter, said potential pet owners need to consider the responsibilities a pet demands before they adopt an animal.

"Actually sit back and calmly look at what the responsibilities are and how an animal would fit into the household and for how long," Schumacher said.

Campus Connection

Issues that affect students at K-State also affect many of the nation's other universities. Read each Friday about one issue that is of importance at K-State and at another campus.

plan on keeping the animal when they decide to adopt," Schumacher said.

Michelle Humbel, Manhattan resident, said she adopted her rat terrier, Gus, when she moved to Manhattan.

"I missed my dog when I moved from home," Humbel said.

However, Humbel and her roommates were not allowed to have a dog at the place they were living.

Gus moved in with Humbel's parents until she moved into a place that allowed pets.

"We made an impulsive decision, but I am responsible and take care of him now," Humbel said.

Not all property owners allow pets, and that is when pet adoption can become difficult and inconvenient.

Darrel Bryant, property owner in Manhattan, said he does not allow pets unless they are in small cages because of possible damage to the property.

"We basically don't allow pets because of potential damage to the property," Bryant said.

Humbel said she does not think adopting a pet is for everyone.

"I don't think all students should have pets," Humbel said. "Not everyone is ready for the responsibility."

The animal shelter is currently full. "We're overloaded and maxed out with cats," Schumacher said. "They just keep rolling in."

Schumacher suggests that if people are considering adopting a pet that they should visit the shelter.

"Adopt it through a shelter rather than supporting backyard breeders and pet shops," Schumacher said.

To adopt an animal at the shelter costs $66 - a $25 adoption fee, a required deposit of $25 if the animal needs to be spayed or neutered, $10 for a deposit for a rabies shot and $6 for a city license to have a pet in Manhattan.

Humbel said adopting Gus was a good decision for her.

"I love him and glad I got him," Humbel said. "He's good company."

Pets, college students don't always mix

By Moira Bagley
KENTUCKY KERNEL (U. KENTUCKY)

LEXINGTON, Ky. - College can be a time for experimentation. Sometimes it's with certain beverages, other times it's with dating.

Sometimes, it's with a pet.

For many, college seems like the right time to get a pet.

"Janie's the best thing that's ever happened to me," said Tyler Moore, an integrated strategic communications junior at the University of Kentucky. "But she's broke my pocket."

Moore spends most of his free time catering to the needs of Janie.

Janie is a 6-month-old puppy that Moore adopted from the Lexington Humane Society when she was 6 weeks old.

"When I first got her, I never went out," Moore said. "I wanted to stay at home with her."

Before adopting Janie, Moore considered the amount of time and money that would go into owning a pet and decided the choice was right for him. But other students may find owning a pet a huge responsibility.

Joey Von Dohlen, an adoptions counselor at the Lexington Humane Society, said that unlike Moore, many college students adopt pets without considering the amount of responsibility a furry friend entails.

"There are a few responsible ones, and then there are those who just want an attention-getter," Von Dohlen said referring to those students who come to the humane society with the desire to adopt.

With 10,000 to 12,000 animals coming into the Lexington Humane Society every year, finding good homes for all of them can be difficult.

Von Dohlen said he often recommends that students shouldn't adopt pets.

"The problem with college students adopting pets is constantly changing schedules and a lack of permanence in living situations," Von Dohlen said.

Von Dohlen said the Lexington Humane Society does reserve the right to deny adoption to those who seem like unfit owners.

"But it's hard to really know how someone is by just meeting with them for a few minutes."

Along with the right to deny ownership, the Humane Society also can perform a property check, in which workers will go to the potential home of a pet to ensure the environment is safe.

Living situations aren't the only factor to take into consideration when considering owning a pet.

"A lot of students don't have time," said Jason Pierce, a clerk at the Lexington Humane Society.

Some students do take time into consideration, like Ryan Meador, a second-year architecture student.

"I really wanted to get a dog, but then I got into architecture school," he said.

Planning for the future is a necessity if you are interested in getting a pet.

Thinking about adopting?

To adopt a pet at the Humane Society you will need $90 and a proof of lease. Sometimes a property check will be done.

Manhattan museum to reopen; Victorian life featured

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After 13 months of renovations, the Wolf House Museum will reopen for residents wanting to revisit Victorian Manhattan.

Museum Curator Edna Williams said visitors can begin touring the museum at 630 Fremont from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

"A lot of people have been asking about it and know what we're doing, so a lot of people are kind of anxious to see it,"

she said.

Williams said crews renovated the downstairs and upstairs entryways, installing a new reproduction staircase and vintage wallpaper. In addition, she said, the museum is featuring items from the 1880s as part of the exhibit, "Victorian Manhattan: Life in the 1880s."

"We used photographs to reproduce the original 1883 staircase," Williams said. "We found some old wallpaper from that period underneath everything, and stayed within the same color range. And we have the original paint colors from 1883 for the stairs and wood work."

Williams said museum employees chose to replicate a time when the museum served as a boarding house from 1868 – the year it was built – until 1938. Different rooms throughout the museum represent the family and four boarders living in the house in 1885.

"We can't find any pictures of these people, but we do know that the two men and two ladies boarding here went to K-State," she said.

Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum, said the museum is furnished with collections from the Riley County Historical Society.

"We have furniture from that time period and earlier. We have a very nice collection here," she said. "We have kind of a slice of life from the 1880s."

This slice of life includes the popular social events of the Victorian era.

"The dining room is set up for a formal dinner, and we explain what people did in the parlor," Williams said.

Visitors to the museum also can go from room to room to see what life was like without electricity or indoor plumbing.

"During that time, they still had an outhouse, and every room features a wash bowl and pitcher," she said.

Collins said there are plans to renovate the entire house as funds become available.

In order to generate funds for the recent renovation, however, Williams said the museum relied on funds gained from yard sales, donations and fund-raisers from about the past 10 years.

"I think that Manhattan really needs to see this, because it's kind of a little jewel that is undiscovered by Manhattan people," she said.

"They don't really realize what is there, so we hope people will come."

Coaches needed for summer sports

Softball, baseball coaching positions provide volunteer opportunities

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Peanuts and Cracker Jack will be only part of the summer experience for some students, as the Manhattan Department of Parks and Recreation is offering opportunities to get involved.

Coaching positions are available for youth baseball and softball, said Mike Buchanan, director of parks and recreation.

There are leagues for kindergarten through 12th grade students, Buchanan said, and there are usually six to 10 teams in each league.

Parks and Recreation is seeking volunteers for coaching positions.

College students usually comprise a fair percentage of the coaching staff for the baseball leagues, Buchanan said.

"No matter their age, coaches must first of all enjoy the sport and obviously have at least some knowledge of the sport," he said.

"They also have to be committed and understand the commitment involved in coaching."

Buchanan said coaches usually devote between four and six hours per week toward coaching. Most age groups have only one game each week, but some of the older leagues could have two games each week.

There are clinics available for coaches, Buchanan said. There will be an informational meeting for coaches in mid-May, and games start in early June.

Adam Dolezal, recreation supervisor, is in charge of the softball program.

He said there usually are only a few college students who coach softball because there is greater interest from community members.

For most sports, however, college students are depended upon to fill many of the coaching positions.

"The most important thing is that you enjoy kids," Buchanan said.

Discussion group ponders controversial issues

Red Pill Forum members debate various topics of moral, ethical interests to humanity

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nurgazy Nurgaziev heads to Marlatt Hall for the Red Pill Forum every Monday evening.

The Red Pill Forum is a discussion group for students about controversial issues, such as the existence of the devil and extraterrestrials, and the origin of man.

The students watch a short clip that introduces the topic and then discuss their opinions with a prepared set of questions related to the topic.

The topic for this week's meeting was the existence of the devil.

After a short video clip showing media portrayals of the devil and people's opinions of whether the devil exists and what it is, the floor was opened for discussion.

Topic questions included "Do you believe the devil is real?" and "If he is not real, why did we create him?"

Past discussions have included the origin of man, sexual ethics and rock music. Future topics are genetic engineering, life after death, extraterrestrials, capital punishment and nuclear arms.

The program started at the University of California-Berkeley as a discussion group, said Dave Diefendorf, campus director of Victory Campus Ministries and the K-State director of the Red Pill Forum.

When "The Matrix" arrived in theaters, group members adopted the philosophy and the theme of taking the red pill and investigating and talking about controversial issues, he said.

The Center for Cultural Apologetics produces the forum videos, and Victory Campus Ministries bought the rights to show the forum videos on campus, he said.

All the discussion leaders are trained to make sure the Red Pill Forum

Next meeting — 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 7, Marlatt 931 environment is open, safe and unbiased.

Even though the program is sponsored by a religious organization — Victory Campus Ministries — it is not a religious program, Diefendorf said.

Nurgaziev is the facilitator for the Marlatt meetings, although he doesn't participate in them.

"I coordinate the discussion in a way that if we are getting off topic, I steer the topic back," he said. "I, as the facilitator, try to get everyone involved. But as far as my own personal opinions, I don't voice them."

The forum is open to everyone, but not everyone has to participate, Nurgaziev said.

"We like for people to share their opinions, but if they don't want to, they don't have to," he said.

The students who participate said they enjoy the program.

"I would say that it's a good medium for us to get together and discuss how we feel about certain things," Ramon Chavez, freshman in psychology, said.

The program is not for putting down others' opinions, Chavez said.

"We don't put people down when we are doing this because everyone is entitled to their own opinion," he said.

Alan Huff, freshman in architecture, attends the meetings, which are in his room.

"It's all pretty controversial, especially when we talk about religion," he said.

Huff said the meetings offer something different to do.

"College life is pretty much go to class and turn in assignments, unless you go out on the weekends," he said. "It's a good opportunity to talk about significant ideas."

TO THE POINT Students should be commended for peaceful talks

On a campus not known for its social activism, K-State students made quite a statement Thursday at the open forum about war in Iraq.

The free-speech zone was populated with students from both sides of the debate, which was organized by the K-State Coalition for Peace. K-State faculty and students were in attendance along with members of the Manhattan community and students from Manhattan High School.

With scheduled speakers and an open mic period, the forum was an effective means to express opinions on such a controversial current event.

Although the speakers strongly believed in their viewpoint, the protesters were respectful of each other, for the most part, despite their disagreement.

Those in attendance should be applauded for exercising their freedoms of speech and assembly no matter which view they support. It is these basic freedoms that the Iraqi people do not experience under Saddam Hussein's rule.

It has now become even more important that Americans cling to these personal freedoms that we are fighting for.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Enough said. I'm done being gay. I want a girlfriend now.

Paul Restivo is 100 percent correct in his column about the education department. It's been three years since I was in Block One. It's sad to see it's still the same.

All this fighting between the Greeks and the independents is blinding us from the real enemy — business majors.

Make-up sex is definitely the best.

I'm looking on this pacifier, and it says it's made by Playtex. And those are two images I don't want together.

Wow, this is only the second time since I've been in college when I've come away from the washing machine with an even number of socks that match.

We're not staring at you. We're laughing at you.

The only thing worse than capri pants is when girls roll them up so that they look like capri pants.

Who pooped in the halls of Haymaker?

Capri pants are like three-quarter sleeve shirts, except 100 percent uglier.

I know the state has a fiscal crisis, but could we please turn off the heater and please turn on the air conditioner in McCain Auditorium's classrooms?

To all the selfish Americans at the peace rally: Iraqis would like freedom as much as you like yours.

You can't be serious. Those protesters are the biggest example of ignorance in American history.

A NOVEL IDEA

Books provide glimpse into another world for readers

I love to read. Reading has to be my absolute favorite pastime apart from spending time hiking. No other form of entertainment captures you like a really good, well-written book. The ability of words to ensnare the senses and transport you to another place or time is a quality that neither movies nor television can compete with.

With books, you become a different person, living a different life, doing something new, adventurous, exciting, mysterious, horrific, comedic or romantic. They are the best escape from the hum-drum life of classes, homework and all the other random annoyances of our everyday lives.

My favorite genre of books to get lost in is fantasy. They have all the elements of a good story, a hero or heroine, comic relief, daring battles, fantastic creatures, magic, romance, foreshadowing, suspense, seemingly impossible quests and almost always a happy ending.

They take you on a rollercoaster ride of emotions from happiness to sadness, gut-busting laughter to tears. You follow the characters and begin to live their lives. You begin to feel that you are a part of the story and get swept away.

My favorite fantasy novelist and perhaps most favored author of all time has to be J.R.R. Tolkien. Thus far, "The Hobbit" is my favorite of his that I've read. It has all the qualities of a good book, and no one has ever been able to top his work.

The depth of Bilbo Baggins' character and his comical ways keep you guessing at every turn. The way Gandalf turns up just in time to save the day and the unexpected behavior of some of the characters make the book so unpredictable. This is why you will never tire of reading it. Tolkien was a literary genius and, in my opinion, has yet to be topped.

Another genre I like to read is mystery. Mystery books have a depth and intricacy unrivaled by any. They seem to be the best at swallowing the reader whole until the just-one-more-chapter syndrome has readers wondering where the time went and how they managed to read the entire book in just one sitting. The nagging need-to-know "who done it," the trepidation as the hero nears the trap laid for him by the villain, the joy when he escapes and the feeling of satisfaction when justice is done all add to the appeal of reading a mystery novel and leave you wanting more.

Yet, sometimes when the homework becomes too much and your dull life needs a laugh, perhaps the best type of book to pick up is a children's book. It's great to reminisce about your younger days.

My favorite authors in this category are Judy Blume, Beverly Cleary and John R. Erickson. Who can forget "Beezus and Ramona" or "Superfudge" from grade school reading? Judy Blume is truly a great children's book writer. And Cleary exhibits an impressive ability to show Beatrice's irritation with her younger sibling's inability to grow up and yet, at the same time, admiration of the ability to be young and carefree. This is a sentiment that is somewhat mirrored by Peter Hatcher's attitude toward his younger brother Fudge in "Superfudge." These are the books that bring out the wish that we all could be young at heart forever.

But the book to read if you're ever in the mood to laugh is one from the "Hank the Cowdog Series" by John R. Erickson.

They follow the adventures of an egotistical cow dog and his cowardly sidekick Drover.

Hank generally gets into lots of trouble due to his pride and arrogance, suffers a few bumps and bruises to his body and ego, but his sense of duty always seems to pay off in the end, if only for just a while. They are quite good books, and I recommend them to anyone who is feeling run down and burnt out.

I really do love books. They're a treasure to be cherished, and I pity anyone who doesn't get to enjoy them as much as I do. The end.

Invention of 'invisibility' coat offers endless possibilities, worries

What would you do if you owned a coat that made you invisible?

I'm sure much of the male population is having wild fantasies about camping out in female dressing rooms.

C'mon, think bigger. Think robbery and assassination.

The possibilities are endless.

Watch the beginning of "Star Trek: Insurrection" for an idea of the mayhem you could cause with a personal cloaking device.

Well, it seems Harry Potter's invisibility cloak may soon become a reality. Is it any surprise the Japanese are responsible?

Susumu Tachi, to be exact, a computer science and physics professor at Tokyo University and inventor of the "invisibility" coat.

Like all good early inventions, it's not perfect. Hell, it's not even close to perfect.

For one thing, it doesn't really make you invisible. Instead, the coat incorporates revolutionary new microscopic reflectors that work like a movie screen but move like fabric.

A fuzzy, greenish picture of what's behind the wearer is projected onto the coat's surface.

Of course, this is unwieldy at present. Not only does the aspiring Invisible Man need the coat, the camera and the projector, but if he is to fool anyone, the people have to be looking through the projector.

I repeat, this thing does not fool the naked eye. Somewhat useless, huh?

Keep in mind, all great inventions start off clunky and unimpressive but soon become more commercially viable and compact.

Case in point: ENIAC, the first digital computer, was the size of a gymnasium, but 50 years later, it has been reproduced on a 744- 5.29 millimeter microchip.

Undoubtedly, commercial and military developers will overcome the obstacles inherent in cloaking technology. Given the current rate of technological advancement, that will not be too far in the future.

The military is already salivating over the thought of what this could do for camouflage. In the meantime, they are looking to adapt it to make vehicles and aircraft more "invisible" to radar or sonar.

Even if the suit difficulties cannot be solved, there are still unlimited applications for this technology in more controlled settings.

It could aid surgeons to get a clearer picture of our insides without slicing us open.

Top secret buildings could be hidden more easily than people since they are stationary — only the projection problem would have to be addressed.

For pilots, cockpits could be coated with this material, allowing them to gauge where the ground is on landings simply by looking down.

As with all powerful technologies, there is the potential for great gain as well as great abuse.

If this is ever perfected, it could render homeland security a moot point. Imagine if terrorists got their hands on this bad boy.

The same applies to criminals and general lowlives. For every person who envisions a benevolent use, I'm sure there are five who would have more nefarious purposes in mind.

If this invention is to be made commercially available, there will have to be regulation and enforcement of the laws concerning it like never before.

Perhaps we should consider the implications of cloaking technology before this goes too much farther. Michael Crichton is probably already writing a book about it.

Do the potential constructive and benevolent applications of this invention outweigh the harm it could cause?

Andrew is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail him at lawson@k-state.edu.

WAR | Troops advance on capital city; forces encounter opposition that U.S. forces had taken control of the airport "and then it got more confusing," with continued fighting, Myers said Thursday night. Capture of the airport would give American and British troops a facility for airlifting equipment and troops to Baghdad.

Along the city's southern edge, Army tanks and Bradley vehicles destroyed at least seven Iraqi armored personnel carriers and more than 15 Iraqi tanks in fighting that went on for more than four hours.

The air assault resumed Friday morning, with coalition forces bombing Iraqi Air Force headquarters in central Baghdad.

Two weeks into the war, American commanders reported a string of successes — on the battlefield and within an Iraqi population initially reticent about embracing invading troops.

Kurdish fighters in the north chipped in, when a top leader suggested they may agree not to seek control of the northern city of Kirkuk.

There were battlefield setbacks, as well. Two Marines were killed and one injured in the close-quarters fighting in Kut. And an Army soldier investigating a destroyed tank in central Iraq was killed by friendly fire when he was mistaken for an Iraqi, the military said.

Defense Department officials were investigating whether a Navy Hornet jet that crashed Wednesday was shot down by a U.S. Patriot missile. The pilot is missing.

Military officials also said nine of 11 bodies discovered in the same raid that freed Pfc Jessica Lynch are believed to be those of American soldiers.

The remains will be sent to the United States for further analysis.

The overall toll of American troops dead passed 50, and Bush visited Camp Lejeune, N.C., which has lost 13 — more than any other installation.

"He's in heaven," the commander in chief told the family of one fallen Marine in a private moment.

To the cheers of thousands earlier in a speech, he vowed victory, and said, "A vise is closing on the regime."

Iraqi officials issued the latest in a series of exhortations in Saddam's name. "Fight them with your hands. God will disgrace them," they said, referring to invading American and British troops.

But the daily urgings seemed increasingly at odds with the military situation across the country, and Myers said Saddam had lost control of 45 percent of Iraq's territory.

As conventional units fought their way to the outskirts of the capital, officials said special forces had raided the Tharthar presidential palace near Tikrit, Saddam's hometown.

Documents were seized at the site north of Baghdad, said Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks at U.S. Central Command in the Persian Gulf, but no ranking members of the regime were found.

"That's all right, he added, "there's other operations ongoing."

To the far north, U.S. special forces and Kurdish militiamen captured the town of Bardarash and a nearby bridge, one of few routes into the city of Mosul near government-held oil fields. Iraqis had held the town for 13 years.

In the country's southern region, British forces penetrated closer to the center of Basra, and warplanes dropped 500-pound and 1,000-pound laser-guided bombs on an Iraqi intelligence complex. Die-hard defenders have held out for days inside the city of 1.3 million.

American officials cited continuing examples of Iraqis cooperating with invading troops. In Najaf, they said a prominent cleric under house arrest by the Iraqi government had urged the population not to interfere with the operations of American or British forces.

"They say this war is morally unjust," Cox said of the K-State Coalition for Peace's stance on the war, "but I hate to see something happen to this country tomorrow. What would they say then? It has been 12 years since the Gulf War. Saddam is still in power, and he still oppresses and kills his own people. This is the last option."

The protest, he said, does not show support for the soldiers.

"My cousin is a captain in the Army," Cox said. "I know for a fact that when he sees these kinds of protests — even though they claim they are supporting the soldiers — it hurts his spirits. He has shared that with me before."

Others disagreed with the choice to protest the war, calling it ineffective.

"It is probably effective for their cause," Evan Needham, freshman in environmental design, said. "But it is not going to end the war. Our soldiers are still going to be over there fighting."

Needham paraded a sign in front of the audience reading "Every minute you protest is another minute that the Iraqi people will be raped, murdered and oppressed."

"It is the truth," he said over the boos from the crowd. "Our troops are fighting for that cause right now."

The final straw, Grauer said, is when the organizers of the protest had the Iraq flag stationed near the American one on the stage.

"We shouldn't be flying the flag of a country that is lynching our prisoners of war," she said. "It is disgusting to me that we are flying that flag at the same time as ours."

ANTI-WAR | Students protest

that we are against the war."

As he spoke with an American flag and an Iraqi flag flying behind him, Altaf Karim, president of the Pakistani Student Association, called the war a killer of humanity.

"They don't know the price of blood," he said of the Bush administration.

"Thousands of people are suffering. Humanity is suffering."

Nate Dorsett, however, had a message for the American news media that he believes is not portraying the true conditions in Iraq.

"Right now, the coverage is incomplete," Dorsett, junior in creative writing, said. "It focuses on weapons and less on truths. It is a one-sided war, just like terrorism. Terrorism is a one-sided war because it is an attack on a group that isn't defending themselves."

Despite their opposition to the war, the anti-war protesters had a clear message — they are in support of the troops but not their mission. They just want them home.

MHS student Jessica Porter said despite her father's service in the military, she was against the war.

"My father left last Monday, and then left to go overseas last night," she said.

"I support our troops, but I am against this war. We came today because we knew we wouldn't be standing alone."

And supporting the troops means bringing them home, Youk said.

"I think it's not supporting the troops to die for unjust wars," he said. "Every troop that dies, I don't see that as supporting."

TRIAL | Mistrial declared in case against former liquor store owner

detective that she had kissed Dean.

"I guess I just left it out," she said.

The witness was also questioned about her intent, immediately following the incident, to prosecute.

"Is it not true that at the time you went to the hospital to be checked out you had no intent to prosecute because you knew they were consensual acts?" Irigonergeray said.

The witness said it was correct that she didn't intend to prosecute at that time.

"I wasn't going to prosecute because I was scared," she said. "I was scared of court, and scared of what I didn't know happened."

The witness was also questioned by Assistant County Attorney Brenda Jordan about why the statement she gave police following the event was sequentially different than the testimony she had previously given under oath.

"It was late. I had been at the hospital all day," she said. "I had to tell the story 200 times, and I just wanted to go home."

The prosecution's second witness, was called to the stand to testify at 3:25 p.m. Thursday.

She testified that she and her friend went to Aggieville on the night in question. They made their way to several bars before going to Fat's. She testified that Dean approached her at the bar and asked if they wanted to go to Dean's Liquor, which he owned, and have free drinks.

The witness testified that Dean gave the two women three drinks, which, she said, he mixed in another room.

When Dean heard noises outside, the witness testified, he instructed them to be quiet and turned off the lights.

At that time, she testified, Dean tried to kiss her and her friend. She said she pushed him away and then left the room to find a lighter.

When she returned, she said she found her friend, the prosecution's first witness, on the floor, her pants around her ankles, and Dean was on his knees between her legs.

"I pulled her up and told her we had to go," she said.

She testified at that point she turned on the light and Dean turned it back off. She said this happened several times and Dean said the women couldn't leave.

The witness testified that she and her friend left the store but had to return because they forgot their purses.

She said when they went back in, Dean put his arm around her neck and took her into another room where he tried to kiss her again.

After a short time, she said, her friend came into the room, and they walked back to the apartment.

Jordan questioned the witness about how she felt when she left the liquor store.

She said she didn't feel like herself.

Jordan asked the witness if she had been drunk before, and she said yes.

Jordan asked if she had had about the same amount of drinks that she had on the night in question before. Again, the witness said yes.

She testified that she felt different on this night than she ever had before.

"I was numb. My head was spinning," she said. "And I've never felt like I had to vomit, but not been able to before."

At this time the counsel approached the bench, and a recess was called.

An hour and a half later, the jury was told the court had taken action, which would end their jury duty.

Irigonergeray said the defense maintains that Dean is innocent of all charges.

"We look forward to having the opportunity to have a fair day in court," he said.

The prosecution would not comment.

Track teams split for pair of weekend road meets

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Mike Smith compared this weekend's meets — the Texas Relays and the Emporia Relays — to a football team's non-conference schedule.

If so, the Emporia Relays are Louisiana-Monroe, while the Texas Relays are Southern California.

Even though K-State's track team officially broke into its outdoor season Saturday, Smith said the Texas Relays is a nationally recognized starting line for the season.

A small group of athletes travel to Austin, Texas, to compete in one of the major early meets of outdoor track.

The Wildcat entries center on sprinters and Texas natives.

The men will run a 4x100 meter relay, 4x200 and a 4x400. Kyle Lancaster and Jared MacLeod will compete as individuals in the 110-meter hurdles and the high jump, respectively.

Meanwhile, the women will participate in the 4x100 and the sprint medley relay. Amy Mortimer will run the 1500 meter, and Ashley Stevens will run the 100. Queeneth Evarunobi and Chaytan Hill, along with Stevens — all Texas natives — also will compete in the jump events.

"It is a good opportunity for these athletes to get in some very high-quality work," Smith said.

"Plus, we like to send the ones from Texas down there so their families and friends can watch them perform."

Kansas City, Kan., native and former 100-meter world record holder Maurice Green will run in the 4x100 meter invitational relay.

His competition: world-record holder Tim Montgomery.

They will be joined by Jon Drummond, Inger Miller and Chryste Gains.

The Wildcats that won't be stargazing in Texas are headed to Emporia State for the second straight week.

ond straight week.

"The majority of the athletes will go to Emporia," Smith said. "The level of competition is vastly different there. There will be a lot of Division II and junior college schools there."

At this stage in the season, he said it's all about getting better.

"Psychologically and physiologically, it is most important to be ready in mid to late May," Smith said. "The volume of training is still increasing, and this meet fits into that training."

K-State vs. Oklahoma State

K-State looks to turn things around on trip to Stillwater

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Mike Clark commented on K-State's eight-game losing streak Wednesday evening.

"The streak?" he said. "Are you talking about the one from 'Old School'? The movie 'Old School,' where the guy is streaking down the street?"

Clark may have been joking because he knows his team has a lot of time to turn things around.

And he may have been joking to help lighten the mood around the Wildcat locker room.

Times are pretty tough for the team that finished fourth in last season's Big 12 Tournament. K-State is sitting at 0-6 in the conference after consecutive sweeps at the hands of Nebraska and Missouri, and things won't be any easier this weekend.

The Cats left for Stillwater, Okla., Thursday evening to begin a three-game series with No. 23/25 Oklahoma State at 6 tonight.

Clark said his team's focus will be on the fundamental elements of baseball when the first pitch flies against the Cowboy.

"We just want to have more competitive at-bats," he said. "We worked really hard yesterday with our bullpen guys, and we did a spray chart for the hitters so they are more aware of hitting the ball where it's pitched."

"We don't want them to try and do too much with pitches that aren't in the location they want. We worked really hard on hitting the curveball and the off-speed pitch, striking back, driving the ball to right field, and driving the ball up the middle."

But K-State's hitters may not have many options against Oklahoma State's bullpen.

OSU has Big 12 series wins over Kansas and defending national champion Texas, fueled by good pitching.

In two wins versus KU, Cowboy pitching gave up 14 runs and struck out 12. In the two victories over Texas, Oklahoma State's staff gave up just eight runs while fanning 10.

First baseman Tim Doty, who paces the Wildcats' long-ball attack with eight bombs on the year, said OSU's pitching is going to test the Cats' bats.

"We're looking to compete a little bit harder, play good baseball every game and give it all we got," he said. "We'll see if we can handle their pitching

Coach Mike Clark argues about a balk called by first-base umpire Terry Barmann during the Wildcats' loss to Missouri on March 20 at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats, who are in the middle of an eight-game losing streak, take on No. 23 ranked Oklahoma State this weekend.

Cats return home to face Colorado

Match important in terms of Big 12 race

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 39th-ranked K-State tennis team will look to build on its three-match winning streak at noon Saturday when it plays No. 37 Colorado (9-5, 2-4) at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

The Cats (9-4, 4-2) finished a seven-match road trip on Saturday with a 5-2 victory over No. 34 Missouri. They hope to continue their recent success against the Buffaloes, an important match for K-State with regard to the Big 12 standings. The Cats will enter Saturday's match ranked fourth in the conference, while Colorado is in ninth place.

Coach Steve Bietau said each Big 12 match is important, and he isn't placing any emphasis on any one in particular.

Evan Semón | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Maria Rosenberg plays against Utah State at Cotton Wood Racquet Club earlier in the season.

"It's an important match," he said, "but I've been saying for a month how important all these matches are, and it hasn't changed."

One area of focus for Bietau in recent weeks has been the play of his doubles teams. The Cats have improved recently, winning five of six doubles matches last weekend.

Colbert Hills, weather give men ingredients to improve

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Playing in the Flint Hills of Kansas can be a tough task for any golf team, but the men's golf team likes to think of it as an advantage.

Wind, rain, heat turning to cold at the drop of a hat, and even more wind are common themes Mother Nature throws at the Cats each day. For the last week and a half of practice at Colbert Hills, the weather has taken a break on the men by showering them with sunshine.

K-State begins play in the Border Olympics today in Laredo, Texas. Coach Tim Norris said the nearly two weeks off has given his team time to improve.

"Practice has gone pretty well," Norris said. "We've had some nice weather.

We've had some windy weather.

"There will be some wind down here in Laredo the next two days, not to the degree that we've had there in Manhattan, but I think the course sets up well for the guys."

Practicing in the wind so often might give K-State an advantage this weekend. But, Norris said, just practicing on a course as difficult as Colbert Hills can make a player better.

"It can only help your game even when it's calm," he said. "You learn to control the ball better, and obviously you have to have more kinds of shots. You have to use a lot more imagination. It helps you become a more rounded player."

MLB | Royals remain undefeated

Brent Mayne hit a three-run homer in a seven-run eighth inning as the Kansas City Royals rallied to beat Chicago 12-6 Thursday for a three-game sweep of the White Sox.

Jose Valentin hit a pair of two-run homers and also tripled for the White Sox. Billy Koch, acquired from Oakland during the offseason, blew a save in his first chance for Chicago.

Kansas City, which scored all its runs with two outs, is 3-0 for the first time since 1979, and Chicago is 0-3 for the first time since 1995.

The White Sox play their home opener Friday against winless Detroit.

The Royals' Mike Sweeney was 3-for-3 with a homer, three walks and three RBIs.

College basketball | A&M center departs

Texas A&M center Nolan Butterfrass has decided to transfer, Coach Melvin Watkins said Thursday.

"We agreed that it would be in his best interest to look for an opportunity that would better fit his needs. We wish Nolan the best," Watkins said.

Butterfrass, a 6-foot-10 junior, played in 17 games this season, averaging 1.1 points and 0.8 rebounds.

NBA | Blazers' practice breaks out in fight

Portland forward Zach Randolph punched teammate Ruben Patterson in the face during practice, leaving the Trail Blazers with another disciplinary problem this season.

It was unclear what prompted the fight Wednesday, but it began with an argument between rookie Qyntel Woods and Patterson, and Randolph stepped in.

"This was pretty serious," Trail Blazers Coach Maurice Cheeks said Thursday.

The Trail Blazers are a half-game ahead of Minnesota for fourth place in the Western Conference, playing for home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs with nine games to go.

The Trail Blazers said disciplinary action against Randolph would be announced before Thursday night's game against Utah.

College basketball | Howland in at UCLA

Ben Howland signed a seven-year contract with UCLA with a base guarantee of $900,000-plus per year. It includes unspecified bonus provisions that could push his salary over $1 million.

"The bottom line is we got our man," UCLA athletic director Dan Guerrero said. "We expect big things from this hire, and no more than what Ben expects."

Howland will try to rebuild the battered Bruins, just as he led Pitt from Big East doormat to national championship contender in four years.

College basketball | Hokies' new coach

Seth Greenberg joined Virginia Tech on Thursday, charged with turning around its men's basketball program after three straight losing seasons.

Athletics Director Jim Weaver called Greenberg, who was hired away from South Florida, "the ideal candidate," and praised his recruiting skills.

Greenberg replaces Ricky Stokes, fired last month after a 45-70 record in four seasons. Stokes' teams went 10-38 in three seasons in the Big East, each time finishing last in their division.

MLB | Puckett cleared of all charges

Hall of Famer Kirby Puckett was cleared Thursday of all charges in the alleged sexual assault of a woman in a restaurant bathroom.

A jury of six men and six women deliberated nearly 12 hours over two days. Puckett sat still as the verdicts were read, then hugged his lawyers.

The 43-year-old Puckett, who played his entire career for the Minnesota Twins, was accused of dragging a woman into the men's room, forcing her into a stall and grabbing her breast hard enough to leave a bruise.

Successful marriage needs planning

Family centers encourage premarital counseling to counter issues

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The white dress. The flowers. The guests.

A wedding is the beginning of a lifetime for two people, but if certain steps have been left out of the engagement process, newlyweds can find themselves wishing things were different.

"(Engaged couples) should go to premarital counseling. Issues can be raised that may not have been thought of beforehand, and they can get a better sense of each other," said Nancy O'Conner, director of the Family Center.

The Family Center on campus offers premarital counseling, but some couples go to the church to get counseling before they tie the knot.

Crystal Kramer, senior in interior architecture, said she and her fiancé, John Sumners, a K-State graduate, have been dating for three years and haven't learned many new things about each other through counseling.

"We are going through premarital counseling through our church. We have pretty much talked about everything the pastor brings up, so we really haven't learned a lot of new things about each other," she said.

O'Conner said there are many issues that arise in the course of premarital counseling that can be very important to the success of the marriage.

"It's not problem-focused, but it often looks at family of origin and helps couples to raise concerns around their beliefs and ideas about parenting and marriage," she said.

Amy Kimball, graduate student in accounting said she and her fiancé, Isaac Thompson, senior in elementary education, plan to attend premarital counseling before their July wedding.

"We have been dating over five years. We did some pre-engagement counseling and also plan on doing some premarital counseling because it will be difficult to go from dating to marriage," Kimball said.

Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services, said as the times change, traditional roles of married couples change.

"More women are out in the world of work, so men have more opportunity to stay home," she said. "In the 1950s, there were more women staying at home, and now it's different because there are so many more women working."

Kimball said she and Thompson have decided how to balance household chores between the two of them by looking at their schedules.

"We are going to split it 50-50. He will have more time after work to do stuff than I will, so he will be doing some grocery shopping and cooking, and I will be doing more cleaning and stuff," she said.

Bolsen said couples should divide chores but should be able to accommodate one another.

"I think the best way to do things is to list all house jobs and then try to determine who likes to do one thing more, but it becomes hard to do one thing all the time. And you have to learn to give a little and work toward deciding who will do what and when," she said.

Another issue that is addressed before marriage is name changes.

Cia Verschelden, assistant professor in social work, said that in the early days of marriage, the bride adopted her husband's last name in order to inherit the family's land in the event of his death.

Because this is no longer an issue, Verschelden said the decision about whether to exchange the last name should be discussed among the bride and groom and their families.

"It has to be something that both the partners feel comfortable with," she said. "The partner's families should be comfortable, too - just because starting out a marriage without family support isn't positive."

Kramer said the decision to change her name came easily to her.

"I sort of joked with him and told him I liked my last name and wanted to keep it, but it was never really a question," she said. "It's a lot more meaningful to him that I do that."

Verschelden said some women choose to keep their own last name in order to maintain a piece of their past.

"A lot of women don't want to change it because they want to keep their own identity," she said. "Every couple needs to decide for themselves."

'DREAM' NO NIGHTMARE

King fans certain to appreciate film adaptation of latest bestseller

"Dreamcatcher," the latest film adaptation of a Stephen King novel, is pretty much a ball of mindless, albeit inventive, fluff.

Thomas Jane ("The Sweetest Thing"), Damian Lewis, Timothy Olyphant ("The Safety of Objects") and Jason Lee ("Heartbreakers") play a group of longtime friends endowed with telepathy. Through a series of flashbacks to their childhood, it is revealed that this gift is tied to Douglas Cavell, or Duddits, a boy with Down syndrome, whom the four befriended 20 years ago.

Not a bad premise.

The four men, who have achieved varying levels of success, meet for their annual hunting trip in the Maine woods. Things immediately get weird.

Jonesy (Lewis) finds a mysterious stranger wandering lost in the woods and brings him back to the cabin. He and Beaver (Lee) quickly run into trouble with the guy, who is harboring an alien life form.

Meanwhile, the government has sent in a task force to control the situation. The details of the aliens' presence are revealed — they infect with a sort of red fungus, then form scary worm-like creatures with way too many teeth inside their victims and burst out to lay their eggs.

When one of the friends is taken over by an alien, the race is on to stop him from jeopardizing the rest of the world. Curtis (Morgan Freeman) also must be prevented from slaughtering the mass of civilians caught within his quarantine.

The film's greatest problem lies in its uneasy mix of science fiction, horror and suspense. Some amount of time is spent on each aspect, but none is developed enough to leave the viewer feeling fully satisfied.

Plus, "Dreamcatcher" is no brain-buster. The plot is straightforward, and the characters are simple, with exceptions of Duddits, Curtis — thanks to Freeman's talent — and the man playing host to the alien. I certainly didn't leave the theater feeling like I had exercised my imagination very much.

Nonetheless, it is not a complete disappointment. In fact, King actually likes the movie — a rare sentiment for the author.

The creativity of the movie's details give it integrity. The friends' telepathy and the bizarre tactics of the alien invaders set this apart from other alien movies. Most horror/suspense/science-fiction movies aren't smart enough to feature, for instance, a man taking refuge in a hidden corner of his mind when an alien takes control of his body.

The cheesy dialogue is smoothed out by the stellar cast.

Freeman, who earns top billing for his supporting role, adds depth to his character. He infuses Curtis with a perfect, creepy inscrutability. The second-best casting is that of Jason Lee as the crass but lovable Beaver. He chews on toothpicks and spouts lewd phrases in the most natural manner imaginable.

"Dreamcatcher" is, overall, a decent fix for those who favor a blend of sci-fi, horror and fantasy.

Movie review by Wendy Gorman

California band continues rise after recent shift to mainstream

What do you get when you cross punk, emo-core and goth? One pissed-off singer with suicidal tendencies and smeared liquid eyeliner.

Blasting out a sound that truly defies any clear classification, AFI has released a dark, aggressive album that might possibly make its members the wildcard players in mainstream playlists they have so successfully avoided. Of course, that's what happens when Dreamworks picks up a talented band with a cult following and hooks it up with production masterminds Butch Vig and Jerry Finn.

Vig, who plays drums in Garbage, produced the Smashing Pumpkins' breakthrough, "Siamese Dream," and Nirvana's breakthrough, "Nevermind." So he seems like a pretty good bet when you're choosing producers for a band that already has it together, but just hasn't penetrated radio or MTV.

What's the result? Just a warning here, there is no denying "Sing the Sorrow" is slick compared to "The Art of Drowning," released on the indie label, Nitro, in 2000. But hear me out. They still rock.

"Sorrow" is slick in that Thursday "Pull Collapse" way, not like in an Aerosmith with Glen Ballard kind of way. The production is clean and smooth, but the pain, sorrow, anger and rock still come through.

Instead of coming across as some kind of "sell-out" album, it sounds more like another step in the path of a growing band.

The album opens with the traditional AFI intro track, and it sets the tone with an anthemic quality that harkens back to the goth archetype of Sisters of Mercy.

I mean, does it get much more goth than "Love your hate / Your faith lost / You are now one of us"?

But they break down any stereotypes you might develop on that quick first track with the rocker "The Leaving Song Pt. II." The song draws mainly on hard-core and emo musically, but it really isn't either.

Singer Davey Havok's voice is just as eclectic as the music. He whispers undertoned lines like Trent Reznor, he snarls and screams like At the Drive-In's Cedric Bixler, and he hits high nasally sing-along choruses with a voice that sounds more like Geoff Rickly of Thursday. But Havok maintains a distinct vocal style that carries the music and avoids ripping off anyone.

I guess sometimes those musical personality crises can pay off.

The album's first single, "Girl's Not Grey," maintains those AFI sensibilities while creating a truly radio-friendly song. It even has a video on MTV, much to the chagrin of some old-school AFI fans.

No one really likes to see his or her favorite bands blow up and go mainstream. It's painful, and you're favorite T-shirt isn't so cool when you see 10 other people wearing it. But it's part of the business.

The combination of musical growth and experienced production work make "Sing the Sorrow" my pick for a spring rocker. This is some truly talented stuff and complex when you consider these guys came from the same southern California scene that gave birth to straight-ahead skater punks like NOFX and Screaming Weasel.

Linkin Park rocks the formula

Comparing Linkin Park to nu-metal bands like Limp Bizkit, P.O.D. and Disturbed is too obvious.

It's like comparing apples to red, delicious, spherical fruits.

Like boy bands, (c)rap/metal bands fit a formula: screaming + rapping + riffing + DJing + being, like, all angry and angsty and stuff = multi-platinum anthem artists for the youth of America.

That's why I want to compare them to Journey.

What is Linkin Park's biggest hit, "In the End," if not "Faithfully" with lip rings?

Although loving either music band ain't always what it's supposed to be, I'm forever theirs, guiltily. Like Linkin Park's millions and Journey's couple of fans, I like these guilty pleasures too much to truly feel guilty.

As mathematical as Linkin Park is, as mechanically produced, as sterile, I want to dismiss the band as many critics smugly do, to detest it as Justin detests Britney, to deny I crank its new single "Somewhere I Belong" when I hear it.

But I can't. Like Journey before it, Linkin Park, while formulaic, at least gets the formula right. The sum of its three-minute pop songs transcends the parts.

The band's emcee, Mike Shinoda, raps clunkily, but he rhymes words Fred Durst can neither spell nor define.

The screamer, Chester Bennington, screams like a banshee being murdered, but he screams in tune — with melody and everything — so his screams create real choruses instead of some lame-o battle cries.

The group's lyrics, while angry, are more mature than its young fans, which is why you can't compare it to the bad bizkit that spoil the bunch.

The guitar, bass, drums and turntables are a hybrid theory of things that go together, like Mom's peanut butter and jelly or Journey's power and ballad.

Plus, they play the piano.

Will everybody who either loved or laughed at Linkin Park's debut album "Hybrid Theory" care that the follow-up " Meteora" essentially sounds the same? Will people care it's more experimental, more nuanced, more cohesive and better than "Hybrid Theory"?

Probably not. Before you hear "Meteora," you already know if you like it or can't stand it.

Does it even matter that new Linkin Park songs such as "Don't Stay," "Lying from You" and the Asian-influenced "Nobody's Listening" kick the crap out of, say, Saliva's "Your Disease," or that, with this album, Linkin Park moves one step closer to the edge of being either timeless or state fair headliners?

In the end, not really. As Linkin Park keeps rocking, the wheel in the sky keeps on turning.

"Jitterbug Joint" is the second performance of Act I during SpringDance 2003 at McCain Auditorium at 8 tonight and Saturday.

Dancers perform variety of pieces

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State and Manhattan communities will have a chance to experience some of what goes on in the Nichols Hall basement this weekend.

SpringDance 2003, the dance department's annual spring performance, will be at 8 tonight and Saturday night in McCain Auditorium.

Need tickets?

$10 for general public
$6 for seniors and students
Call McCain Box Office at 532-6428 or visit www.k-state.edu/mccain

The performance will feature two ballets choreographed by Joyce Yagerline, director of dance. Other pieces include a swing dance choreographed by David Ollington, production coordinator of SpringDance 2003, and two modern dance pieces choreographed by Mary Chase, a professor in the dance department.

Although SpringDance 2003 is predominantly faculty choreographed, there will be two student-choreographed pieces, Chase said.

One of the pieces will be completely student created, featuring student-designed costumes and live musical accompaniment by K-State students, she said.

Audience members also will see jazz and tap dancing in the two-act show.

Ollington said he anticipates the audience enjoying the wide variety and high quality of dancing in SpringDance 2003.

"There's really something for everyone," he said. "If there's a dance that someone might not like, more than likely, they'll like the next one."

Molly Callaway, freshman in dance, said the variety and contrast of dances represent the dance department well.

"There's every single style of dance, and the technical level is high," she said. "These dances will bring people back wanting to see more."

Ollington, who spent an average of 10 to 15 hours a week working on the concert, said there were several things he considered when deciding how to produce SpringDance 2003.

"I wanted to show the dance program in the best light, and give students a performance experience — I also wanted them to have fun," he said.

Ollington said he hoped audience members would realize that movements that appear to look easy actually can be very difficult.

"One of the elements of dance is to give difficult motion an effortless quality," he said. "I find myself gasping at a performance that someone who hasn't studied movement might see as simple to do."

Annie Rose, graduate student in special education, will perform tonight in Act II of SpringDance 2003 at McCain Auditorium in "Italian Symphony."

Yagerline said in addition to continuing the traditions of including live music accompaniment and different genres of dance, the department is beginning a new tradition in SpringDance 2003.

She said two of the pieces K-State took to the American College Dance Festival at the end of January will be presented in SpringDance 2003.

"We're highlighting and revisiting works we took," she said. "It's something new and kind of cool."

Yagerline has her own hopes for SpringDance 2003.

"We are the best kept secret at K-State, and I want that secret to become public," she said. "This is KSU dance — we can dance. And that's what I want to show the audience. I want to show us off."

"This is the KSU dance program — look at us."

because it's pretty good.

"We need to make sure we're not giving away at-bats. We have to do our jobs at the plate, and hopefully we'll take care of business."

Pitching, on the other hand, has been poor. In six conference losses, the Wildcats have given up 60 runs.

Catcher Ryan Baldwin, K-State's RBI and doubles leader with 36 and 13, respectively, said improved pitching will help defeat OSU.

"We need to go out and play good baseball — good defense, good hitting and definately good pitching because Oklahoma State has a good team."

Clark is optimistic about defeating the Cowboys.

"We've been practicing really well, and we've got a lot accomplished," he said. "Now they just have to bring it to the ballpark."

TENNIS | Team looks forward to weekend matches

"We've spent some time with the doubles this week," Bietau said.

"We've spent time with the singles trying to make sure our players understand why things are happening. We're just trying to build some momentum and play better."

Playing well recently for the Cats have been junior Hayley McIver and sophomore Andrea Cooper. McIver, named Big 12 Player of the Week on Tuesday, is on a four-match winning streak and has won seven of her last eight. Cooper has won six straight and nine of her last 10.

Leading the way for the Buffaloes will be Dominique Lempere. The 113th-ranked senior is 17-8 this season at No. 1 singles.

On the horizon are home matches against Big 12 leader Texas on April 20 and third-place Texas A&M on April 18.

As for Bietau and the Cats, they are trying to take it one match at a time.

"Our team understands that we need to have all of our energy focused on Colorado on Saturday," Bietau said.

GOLF | Upperclassmen to assist in tournament

The 19-team field K-State will compete against features seven teams ranked in the latest Golfweek/Sagrain rankings. K-State was close to turning that number into an eight, but came in ranked 52nd.

"This is a field that is probably as strong as we'll see all spring up until the conference championship," Norris said. "Top to bottom, this is a darn good field, and that's when we came here."

Norris will send freshman Josh Persons, sophomore Matt Van Cleave, and juniors A.J. Elgert, Aaron Watkins and Greg Douglas to Laredo. Persons led K-State in its last outing in Stevenson, Calif., where he finished fourth.

The Cats will need help from the upperclassmen, though, if they are to take home the championship this weekend.

"That's going to be the difference," Norris said.

President John O'Hara and Vice President Travis Stryker were sworn in by their predecessors, Zac Cook and Todd Kohman.

Cook and Kohman both thanked the senators for their hard work during the past year.

"Thanks for everything you do for the school and everything you did for me," Kohman said.

Cook offered advice for the new senators who sat before him.

"I just have a small challenge to you guys," he said. "When you come in Thursday nights, don't sit in the same seat and next to the same person every week."

"Look for a diverse opinion, and have fun."

Student Senate

The following student senators were elected as Senate leaders for the 2003-04 term at Thursday night's meeting:

- Laurie Quair, Senate chair
- Julie Quackenbush, Senate vice chair
- Sam Meier, Faculty Senate representative
- Hannah Mueledner, Senate intern coordinator

U.S. forces solidify Baghdad position

By Calvin Woodward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A U.S. military plane landed Sunday at Baghdad's international airport while American forces completed their encirclement of the capital, rapidly chipping away at vestiges of Saddam Hussein's power.

The intense fighting took a growing toll on combatants and civilians, however. Russian diplomats and a convoy of America's Kurdish comrades in arms were among unintended victims caught in crossfire and friendly fire.

America At War

A C-130 cargo plane landed at the airport late Sunday, demonstrating that the allies were now ready to put the recently captured tarmac to their own use.

Other prizes fell into allied hands Sunday. Southeast of Baghdad, Marines seized one of Saddam's palaces, poked through remnants of a Republican Guard headquarters and searched a suspected terrorist training camp, finding the shell of a passenger jet believed to be used for hijacking practice.

U.S. forces consolidated positions encircling Baghdad and declared they controlled all highways in and out of the city one day after raiding the capital and killing perhaps several thousand Iraqi shooters, by rough U.S. estimates.

On another vital front, British troops thrust deep into Basra, Iraq's second largest city, with a sense they are finally shaking loose the Saddam loyalists who have hung on for more than two weeks.

But in northern Iraq, U.S. aircraft mistakenly bombed a convoy of allied Kurdish fighters operating with U.S. special forces in a battle at a crossroads south of Irbil.

At least 17 Kurdish fighters died, said Hoshiyar Zebari, a senior member of the governing Kurdistan Democratic Party. He said that among the 45 wounded was a brother of the party's leader.

A convoy of Russian diplomats, including the ambassador, came under fire Sunday while evacuating Baghdad, the Russian foreign ministry said.

K-State copes with market

KSU Foundation losses could total $4.2 million

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Earlier this semester, KSU Foundation officials announced that as the stock market dips lower and lower, about $4.2 million of the $34 million the Foundation distributed in fiscal year 2002 could be affected.

Although the $4.2 million figure would be the worst case scenario, Julie Lea, director of communications, said she doubts K-State will lose that much. She said the Foundation has already received interests and dividends that can be turned around and paid out, which decreases that figure.

However, K-State will take a hit in the stock market, and Lea said scholarships will be affected, among other things.

She said of the $4.2 million that could be impacted, 59.9 percent of the impacted money will come from scholarships. Another 17.6 percent of it would affect salary enhancement or faculty chairs. This leaves 22.5 percent of the impacted money from program support, academic support for classrooms and labs, books and funds that are given at the dean's discretion.

Although the Foundation has invested its money in several different areas, Lea said the stock market has been losing money for three years. She said because of market losses, the market value of investments is now below the value of the original gift.

Despite the decrease in value of its investments, there have been no negative comments from donors, said Gary Hellebust, president and CEO of the Foundation.

"Most of our donors are significant investors and understand what's going on and are very pleased in our performance," he said.

Hellebust said although K-State is experiencing a decrease in value of investments, it isn't because of bad investing practices.

"Our portfolio is very similar to other universities," he said. "There's no better place to be than where we've invested. The diversity of our investment portfolio has performed in the upper quartile of all the universities' foundations in the country."

Alan Klug, vice president for administration and finance/CFO, said each individual college administration knows how much monetary support it will lose, and that the feedback he's received from faculty are questions instead of complaints.

Local elementary schools facing future budget cuts

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Reading, writing and arithmetic are some of the most basic skills taught during elementary school.

However, for some schools faced with a bare-bones budget, consolidation and program cuts, there may be little room for much else.

More and more school boards are being forced to cut programs and activities as districts across the state balance dwindling student numbers and poor budgets.

For Larry Weaver, professor of physics, the problem is all too familiar.

Weaver has served on the USD 383 Manhattan-Ogden school board for almost eight Muslim students open mosque for public

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Helping people from different backgrounds understand and respect each other was the purpose of the Muslim Student Association's open house on Saturday, MSA president Ashraf Aly said.

Aly, third-year graduate student in economics, said MSA has had the open house at the Islamic Center, 1224 Hylton Heights Road, each of the three years he has been at K-State, always right after the All-University K-State Open House.

Before entering the mosque, visitors were asked to adhere to Islamic custom and take off their shoes.

Inside, there are two rooms immediately visible for prayer. The larger room in front of the main doors to the mosque is for men. To its side is the women's prayer room.

Both are completely bare except for the wall in the front of the men's prayer room, which contains six clocks on the wall.

These clocks are the times of the five daily Islamic prayers. Each time represents a part of the day - dawn, early afternoon, late afternoon, sunset and later in the night.

Each of these prayers takes five minutes. On Fridays, there is a 30-minute service accompanying a 12:30 prayer. The service is led by the Imam, the Islamic holy man, Aly said.

In the basement of the mosque is the social area where meals are served during Ramadan.

Meat Loaf announces current tour to be last, plans to pursue serious acting career

NEW YORK — You can love Meat Loaf — you can love him forever — but you can't see him in concert for much longer.

The singer-actor is embarking on his final world tour, which will last 15 months. The U.S. portion is scheduled to begin June 22 in Saratoga, Calif., and end Sept. 29 in West Springfield, Mass. Then he'll travel to Europe, Australia and Asia before returning to Europe and the United States.

"He wants to tour and then devote himself to acting," his spokesman, Dan Forman at Susan Blond Inc., said Friday. "He has the acting bug — he's been doing that for a while and he's appeared in some great films."

Meat Loaf's movies include "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," "Fight Club" and "Formula 51."

Born Marvin Lee Aday in Dallas, the 51-year-old singer made his name with theatrical stage productions and operatic songs, including "Paradise by the Dashboard Light," "Two Out of Three Ain't Bad" and "Bat Out of Hell." He won a Grammy for his 1993 hit "I'd Do Anything For Love (But I Won't Do That)."

Army band reunites

WHITTIER, Calif. — Nearly 60 years after entertaining troops during World War II, jazz pianist Dave Brubeck and his former Army band buddies have reunited.

But it was mostly stories, not riffs, that were swapped Saturday by the 11 band members at the home of organizer Slim Tanner. Eighty had attended the last reunion, in 1980.

Tanner, 82, joked that he and the others should enlist.

"Dave, I hate to tell you this, but someone has to do latrine detail," said Tanner, 87.

Brubeck, 82, joined the Army in 1942. In 1944, he was about to be sent to the Battle of Bulge when a Red Cross act needed a pianist. Brubeck volunteered and eventually started his own Army jazz band.

At the reunion, the band members showed they still know how to put on a show. Tanner performed a duet by himself, donning costumes and singing male and female parts.

The veterans wanted to honor Brubeck, but he wouldn't let them.

Illinois governor becomes new father

CHICAGO — If it worked once, Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich and wife Patti, 10 days overdue, figured Mexican food might speed up the delivery of their second child.

They were right.

The couple went out for dinner Friday night and at 5 a.m. Saturday became the proud parents of Anne Blagojevich, a brunette who weighed in at 8 pounds, 5 ounces.

The Blagojeviches had eaten at a Mexican restaurant just before daughter Amy was born six years ago and decided to give it another try to speed along Anne's delivery, the governor said.

This time, though, the couple had to leave the restaurant before they finished eating. As Blagojevich delicately put it, his wife's symptoms were "profound."

Anne has already been nicknamed "Annie" by her parents and big sister.

"She's so tiny and she's so small that we just feel comfortable calling her Annie," the governor said, and "with a last name like Blagojevich, you kind of want a short first name."

Cash to be commemorated

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Music videos became popular nearly 30 years after Johnny Cash had his first big hit, but the legendary baritone will be paid special tribute Monday night by Country Music Television.

The cable network is devoting a segment to Cash on its Flameworthy Video Music Awards, set for 8 p.m. EDT.

Vince Gill will emcee the tribute, which will showcase several singers including Cash's daughter, Rosanne Cash.

Cash is recovering from pneumonia and isn't expected to attend, said Brian Philips, the network's general manager.

Awards, voted on by fans, are presented in 11 categories, including video of the year. Among the nominees due to perform are Faith Hill, Alan Jackson, Tim McGraw, Shania Twain and Kenny Chesney.

Kid Rock and Sheryl Crow also will perform their duet, "Picture," a surprise hit that landed Rock a male video of the year nomination. Rock's true duet partner, actress Pamela Anderson, will co-host the show with Toby Keith.

Philips says the show reflects CMT's broad appeal.

"People who love music aren't narrow in what their perceptions of what country should be," he said. "People love diverse flavors in country music."

Community petitions for Griffith statue

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. — This community wants its own statue of Sheriff Andy Taylor.

About 7,500 residents and fans of "The Andy Griffith Show" signed a petition asking TV Land to erect a likeness of Griffith here in his hometown.

The cable network, which airs "The Andy Griffith Show" and other classic shows, already plans to erect bronze statue of Taylor in the state capital of Raleigh. The statue in Raleigh would be for all of North Carolina, a TV Land spokeswoman has said.

"We wanted to say thank you to TV Land and show our appreciation for the statue in Raleigh, but would be even more appreciative if a similar statue was placed here," said Ann Vaughn, director of the Mount Airy Visitors Center.

Mount Airy is said to have been the inspiration for the fictional town of Mayberry.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES

By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled...or have already failed...you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "Why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight...or loses weight...the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.
2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating - how often and at what times during the day - causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.
3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

Jayhawk support found at K-State

By Adam Lee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interstate rivalry aside, the University of Kansas' march to the national championship basketball game has turned many K-State students into galvanized Jayhawk fans.

For others, KU basketball has been a way of life regardless of where they go to school.

Jess John, senior in anthropology, and her brother Matthew John, sophomore in political science, have been Jayhawk basketball fans since they were in elementary school. Jess said her family would sit down together to watch the KU game every Saturday.

"I remember watching KU lose to Duke in 1991. It was devastating," Matthew said. "I didn't want to go to school the next day because I knew the K-State fans would make fun of me."

The Johns' love of Kansas basketball hasn't swayed even though they now are students at K-State. Matthew said it took a while for purple to become palatable to him, but now he has grown accustomed to cheering for both the Wildcats and the Jayhawks.

Matthew said he thinks it's all right to cheer for both schools and sees Kansas in the national championship as a way to build recognition for the state. He said there are K-State students who continue to despise anything associated with KU, but there are also Wildcat fans who are sympathetic toward the Jayhawks.

The fact that there are a significant number of Jayhawk fans in Manhattan can be established by browsing through the sporting goods stores in the area. As Kansas made its way through the brackets, more and more crimson and blue started showing up next to the purple and white on the racks of local merchants.

Ballard's Sporting Goods in Aggieville carries a selection of Final Four and Jayhawk T-shirts. Ballard's associate Tamel Sisney said that while the store sells Final Four merchandise every year, it normally doesn't stock KU T-shirts.

Sisney said Ballard's sells hats of all the Big 12 teams for fans that travel to Manhattan, but other than that it usually just sticks to Wildcat gear.

Sisney said sales have been good, but the addition of Jayhawk merchandise has taken some people by surprise.

"A little girl came in and said, 'Mom, that's not supposed to be in this store,'" Sisney said.

The Finish Line in Manhattan Town Center has been carrying KU apparel throughout the college basketball season and now has shirts and hats proclaiming the Jayhawks as regional champions.

KU shooting shirts, shorts, jackets and Nick Collison jerseys have had strong sales all season, but Finish Line manager Rory Stahly said they have been in high demand since the team beat Arizona.

"Anything KU is hot, but the Final Four stuff is really popular. We've already sold through two styles of T-shirts," Stahly said.

Stahly estimated that sales of Jayhawk clothing was about 10 times higher than usual leading up to Saturday's semifinal game. If Kansas wins the national championship, Stahly expects sales to be even better.

"We'll have championship stuff the next morning when we open," Stahly said.

State Senate fails to pass Sunday liquor sales bill

By Emily Fredrix
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate narrowly defeated a bill to allow Sunday sales of packaged liquor in communities where voters approve, preventing the measure from going to the governor.

Legislators then adjourned Friday night for a recess that ends April 30, when they reconvene for a wrap-up session in which the liquor bill could be considered again.

The Sunday sales measure is part of a broader bill — dealing with the state's Liquor Control Act — that took an unusual route to the vote in which the Senate rejected it 19-18.

Typically, legislation is studied in a House or Senate committee and debated before being put to a vote.

The Senate had not taken up any Sunday liquor measures in the current session.

But it was effectively forced to act after the House put the alcohol regulation language into a Senate-passed bill, approved it Thursday on an 85-36 vote and returned it to the Senate for negotiations.

As the two chambers' negotiators were struggling over the measure Friday evening, Sen. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, simply moved for a Senate vote on whether to accept the bill as approved by the House.

Under the bill, retailers could sell packaged liquor on Sundays if voters in the city or county approved. Kansas' overall liquor regulations would be rewritten to make clear that they apply uniformly throughout the state.

The legislation was sparked by a Wyandotte County judge's decision upholding last year's public votes in that county to allow Sunday sales.

Take a seat.

TO THE POINT Celebrate, learn about K-State's diverse cultures

People talk about being diverse. This week they can try to become more diverse through learning.

K-State students, professors and staff have chances to diversify themselves, open their minds and see into others' lives as part of End Discrimination Week.

During this time of war, in which some seem to think only about differences, it's important to learn about other cultures and to respect them.

Through learning comes understanding.

We commend the End Discrimination Week coordinators, Union Program Council members, International Week organizers as well as so many other groups for continuing to make very visible attempts to increase education and rid the campus of stereotypes.

Students built a wall Saturday to symbolize the barrier of discrimination. Its destruction on Thursday may help some remember to break through their comfort zones and learn about others' ways. UPC Festivals of Nations each month as well as informational meetings that show films like "The Matthew Shepherd Story" can help erase hate and build understanding.

Thank you to all those who continue to make K-State more diverse.

You have all earned one-way tickets to hell.

My friend has just taken cybersex to a whole new level, because now she's humping the computer.

To the girl who rear-ended my motorcycle on Anderson today — don't you at least owe me dinner?

Whatever, I do what I want.

What kind of boyfriend gets their girlfriend a one-inch statue of a silver Chihuahua on a rock?

I'm sad, and I want some Burger King.

Sears and Roebuck was the Victoria's Secret of the 1950s.

Tools and panties in the same publication. Those were the good old days.

You're so fat right now.

There's a store that I saw the other day that said they deal in unfinished furniture. I'm gonna have to go in there because I'm looking for a nice three-legged table.

To the idiot drunk girl who keeps incessantly screaming, running around the neighborhood topless, and just peed on my lawn: I first of all hope someone got pictures to show how you stupid you look, and second of all, I hope you ended up hanging over the toilet all night puking.

I just had sex with a girl, and her boyfriend came and picked her up. Isn't America great?

You anti-war protesters are lame, having to get high school students to support yourself. The war protesters will recruit students from the middle school.

BLOOD THIRSTY

Support Red Cross at blood drive; consider need for regular donations

The Red Cross Blood Drive will once again come to campus this week. Once again, they will try and secure our nation's blood supply. Once again, they will call upon college students to help our Central Plains Region, which includes Kansas and Northern Oklahoma. If there is a critical need, such as in the event of a national emergency or military purposes, our blood will be sent there to help.

And once, again our generation will fail to heed the call.

That's right, despite the fact that everyone knows or will know someone who needs blood, people don't like to give it. Five percent of eligible donors give blood. That's right, 5 percent. I don't even have my usual, weak attempt at a witty comment here. For a country that prides itself on our willingness to help others, that is a sad indictment.

The blood drives on campus have tried everything to get people in the door and give them support. They have given away T-shirts, had contests with KU, and this year will use support from athletic teams to try and draw attention. They don't pay like plasma centers because they don't want to risk people lying about their health history for money. They simply try to put their faith in people to help each other out.

What does it say about our society when their marketing suggests that maybe the opportunity to save a life isn't enough to get some in the door? But by God that free T-shirt really sweetens the pot.

What makes for the low turnout? Bree Cox, communication supervisor of the American Red Cross Central Plains Region Blood Services, said people just don't ever think of it as a need. People expect the blood to be there, but don't think to give it themselves.

I mean, that is what hospitals are for, right? They should always have blood ready for national emergencies, small emergencies, car wreck survivors, joint replacements, heart surgeries, organ transplants and the myriad of other uses for blood everyday. We assume it will be there for all these needs. But the pint here and the pint there all have to come from somewhere.

The regular donors are what the Red Cross counts on for disasters. It takes 48 hours for blood to be prepared and readied to use. The long lines to donate were great after 9/11, but these donors' blood didn't help those hurt in New York by the attacks. It was the blood of the regular donors who give every two months rain or shine.

Unfortunately, a dedicated comtingent of regular donors is from the aging World War Two and Korean era, Cox said. These people understand the importance of a national blood supply. But they aren't going to be around forever to donate.

Who is going to give when they are gone?

If you are in good health, at least 110 pounds, over age 17 and haven't given blood in the last 56 days you are eligible. They will ask you some other health questions to ensure your blood safety. But if you meet the first criteria there is no reason you shouldn't be there to try and donate. It isn't hard.

I realize some people don't like the idea of needles entering their skin. I don't. Despite the rugged, tough image that many people hold of me because of my picture up top there, I really am a teddy bear. A teddy bear who is deathly afraid of sharp needles.

That is why on my first time giving I stared at the ceiling. I put myself in a happy place surrounded by small puppies. I did shriek out like a small child but that is because I'm a wuss. It really only felt like a pinch.

Of course I didn't jump for joy when they asked if they could draw from my other arm to finish my pint. That is another thing. Drink plenty of water so your donation can go quickly and easily.

Now I drink enough water to drown a water buffalo. A really big water buffalo.

Except for having to use the bathroom every five minutes, it's easy for me to give now. I mean, I still look away and think about small puppies when that needle shows up. But again, that is because I'm a wuss.

Call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE and set up an appointment for this week. Appointments help spread donations out and makes the wait shorter for you.

If you don't set one up, just show up. And bring a friend. You can go the Rec, Haymaker Hall and at the Union at various times through the week.

The goal is 900 units of blood. That is almost enough for two day's worth of blood for our whole region. Who knows who your blood could help? It could be a stranger. It could be someone you know.

Our generation needs to begin to do our part for our nation. It shouldn't take a crisis to make us realize the importance of helping each other out. We need to heed that call at all times. This is an easy way to start.

Columnist comments on world, local affairs, provides outlook on issues

There is so much still going on in the world right now, I again had trouble narrowing one specific topic down. Thus, I present to you, brief commentary on a few news snippets:

President Wefald's salary falls close to the bottom in comparison with other Big 12 school presidents. So what? What is astounding is that there are people who run universities and colleges who make hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, but what about the people teaching in those institutions?

According to the National Education Association estimates database and the North Carolina Association of Educators ranking of average teacher salaries in 2001 and 2002, New Jersey ranks first with an average salary of $54,575. Kansas ranked a measly 42nd with an average salary of $36,673 in 2002 and 40th in 2001 with $35,901. But what does this all mean? This means that while we dispute over which college president has the most-consuming schedule, there are teachers who couldn't make one year of a president's salary in fifteen years.

But as President Wefald said, "I'm the only one that lives on campus, and there are pluses and minuses to that." What a hell of a minus to only make about $200,000, huh? Where can I sign up for that grief?

ANGEL WILSON

Let's hear it for the power of poetry! With shows like HBO's "Def Poetry Jam" and BET's "Lyric Café," there is now hot debate about spoken word poetry becoming too commercialized (like how it is appearing in advertisements and on television shows).

Granted this is yet another aspect of black culture that is quickly receiving crossover status, but that is nothing new. That is sadly the nature of popularity. Just look at the black pants that have been termed "sorority girl pants" or the cute shell necklaces, bracelets and belts that everybody just has to have (this shell is called a "cowrie," by the way).

The movement has even migrated to K-State with slam poet Taylor Mali performing in Forum Hall. Who would have thought that verbal expression would receive welcoming arms from a society that isn't always supportive of things they consider "artsy-fartsy?"

The "Will You Speak" open-mic forum was also very surprising to me. Considering all of the many crude, witless and deprecating comments phoned into the Campus Fourum everyday, you would think that people would relish the idea of being able to say even more things about the "newspaper that K-State loves to hate."

Instead there were only a few students who really had something to say. Yeah, I guess everyone else was too busy plotting their next round of fantastic jokes about Cox cable, "Vagina Monologues" and war bashing. Promise me that this fun will never end, Regis.

Opening arguments were heard this past week on the University of Michigan's affirmative action cases. "Lower your qualification standards," Justice Antonin Scalia said. "If the value of having everybody in a mix with people of other races is so significant to you, just lower your qualification standards. You don't have to be the great college you are. You could be a lesser college, if this value is important enough to you."

Wow. Way to further promote the notion that dumbness is a trait that doesn't disappear with age or status. John Payton, the lawyer for the university, seemed embarrassed when he had to admit that lowering standards doesn't necessarily equal diversity. With such a sticky issue, this is very much setting the tone to be one of the most influential cases in history. If not because of the subject matter alone, then because of the precedent that will be set.

Barrier to crumble

Wall highlights End Discrimination Week

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students will tear down a barrier on Thursday that took years to construct — sort of.

The Associated General Contractors constructed a wall Saturday morning that is meant to symbolize the barrier of discrimination. On Thursday, students will have the opportunity to destroy the wall as part of End Discrimination Week.

"The wall coming down is breaking down barriers and symbolizing unity and awareness of discrimination," Tiffany Happer, coordinator of End Discrimination Week, said.

The wall is 5 feet 4 inches tall and about 20 feet long. Jake Perkins, senior in construction science, said. A crew of about 15 students in the student group worked to construct the wall, which was designed by Carl Riblett, associate professor of architectural engineering.

The wall is in the field across from Haymaker and Moore halls. It is constructed from 8-inch concrete masonry units.

Students and community members are invited to come and write messages on the wall throughout the week. Happer said the messages at other similar events have included messages about war, racism and religious oppression — anything they want to see destroyed when the wall comes down, she said.

Jason Snider, sophomore in construction science, helps build the "Wall of Diversity." "The wall is going to be pulled down by several people with ropes," Snider said.

Happer said there is a fear that people will misinterpret the messages as hurtful, not knowing the wall will come down. There will be someone at the wall at all times, she said, to explain its purpose.

"We don't want to be hurtful," she said. "But as a community, we want to end these words and end the discrimination that we see today."

Craig Dickerson, senior in construction science, was one of the students involved in the wall's construction. He said the group is always looking for ways to get involved with the community.

"We were more than willing to help," he said. "It's going for a good cause."

The idea for tearing down a wall, Happer said, was created at the University of Utah. Other universities will be performing similar feats, and the U.S. Congress will tear down a wall in October, she said.

Happer said she was glad to get the student group involved in helping build the wall. Not only did it save money on labor costs, which would have been the largest expense, but it also helped in getting students involved in the week — one of the primary goals, she said.

Classy Cats place 9th in Florida competition

Team improves on past tournament results

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Classy Cats spent their weekend parasailing and swimming in the ocean — but also found time to squeeze in a dance or two.

The team placed ninth at the National Dance Alliance's national competition in Daytona, Fla., in a field of 30 Division I-A universities, improving upon its 11th-place finish last year. The Classy Cats also placed higher than any of the Big 12 schools at the competition.

Coach Kathleen Henao said the team's final place was rewarding because many of the other schools focus all year on national competitions, while the Classy Cats didn't begin practicing their nationals routine until January.

"It's very rewarding this year," Henao said. "There are some very traditional teams, and it's tough for any team to jump in and be in the top five. We did everything we could in our second year."

Before the competition, one of the team's goals was to displace one of the teams that traditionally finishes well at the competition. In beating Clemson, the team did just that.

Andrea Johnston, squad leader, said the squad's expectations remained realistic, and the members would like to continue to improve next year.

With all the goals and competition, though, Johnston said the excitement of the venue is really what makes the event special.

"There's something about dancing on that stage on the beach — it's amazing," she said. "It's kind of a blur when it's happening. You're dancing harder than ever before, and you hit your ending pose, and everyone's cheering — it's just amazing."

Many in the crowd took notice of the Classy Cats, Henao said.

Coaches from three of the top five teams made comments about how much the team had improved from last year, Henao said, which shows the Classy Cats are doing something right.

Although some other dance teams choose to focus on nationals, Libby Towner, sophomore in secondary education, said the experience of performing at football, volleyball and basketball games is not worth sacrificing for a better place at competition.

Performing at events is such an integral part of the team's success, she said, that the experience helped even in Florida — the dancers listened to the "Wabash Cannonball" before performing in the final round on Friday.

"K-State is such a great atmosphere, and we take great pride in performing at all the games," Towner said.

TIGHT WIN

Netters defeat Colorado through close matches

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the third time in as many weeks, Coach Steve Bietau could only watch as another close match unfolded.

Leading 3-2 with the final two matches in progress, Bietau knew he only needed one point.

"In a situation like this, you're always looking for the fourth point," Bietau said. "And when you're in my spot, whenever you get it and wherever you get it, you're pretty happy."

He found that fourth point Saturday as sophomore Maria Rosenberg clinched the match by knocking off Colorado's Kate Lutgert 6-3, 2-6, 6-4. Senior Petra Sedlmajerova also won her match, giving K-State a 5-2 victory over the Buffaloes.

Rosenberg said she felt good about her performance despite being unaware of the team score.

"Actually, I didn't know what was going on," she said. "I figured that the overall score was tight because Paulina lost next to me, and I didn't know what was going on in the other matches. I feel happy because it was a very close match, and it could have gone either way."

Last weekend it was junior Hayley McIver who clinched victory during a 5-2 upset of Missouri. It was nothing new to her, having also clinched the Cats' 4-3 win against Southern Methodist on March 19.

Bietau said having a team full of players who can step up is helpful, especially during a crucial part of the season.

"We do have a lot of people that can step up and have shown that they can do that," Bietau said. "We're at the stage of the season where you can't stay the same. You're going to go up and do some things well — win some matches, pick up some momentum — or you're going to start to fade."

Another problem that plagued the Cats was doubles play. Despite winning the doubles point against Colorado, Bietau said his team can improve.

"We didn't start well in the doubles," he said. "The first 20 minutes of it weren't really good for us. Fortunately, we fought back in those doubles matches enough to get the doubles point."

Improvement remains Bietau's top priority.

"This is another win against an important conference opponent. It was a match played under different conditions, and you have to do a few different things to win it. They're all key right now, but when you can add this to what happened last weekend I think it's really important."

K-State's Jessica Simosa goes to return a ball in a match against Colorado on Saturday afternoon. Simosa beat Colorado's Lia Dimingo 6-0, 6-1 in singles.

Track | Emporia trip good for Cats

Rebekah Green, Tabra Alpers and Nicole Grose of K-State won individual events, while Craig Smith and Marquis Clark hit regional-qualifying marks, to lead the Wildcats at the Euler State Farm Emporia State Relays on Saturday.

Chaytan Hill finished fourth and added more than 10 inches to her previous career-best in the women's triple jump, while Amy Mortimer also placed fourth in the women's 1,500-meter run to highlight K-State performances at the Clyde Littlefield Texas Relays.

Men's golf | K-State finishes 5th

K-State shot an even-par 288 Saturday to finish fifth on Saturday at the Border Olympics in Laredo, Texas.

Junior Aaron Watkins tied for 11th with a 1-under 215, junior Greg Douglas was 22nd (217), freshman Josh Persons finished 28th (219), junior A.J. Elgert was 38th (220) and sophomore Matt Van Cleave was 56th (224).

MLB | Griffey out at least 6 weeks

Ken Griffey Jr. will be out for at least six weeks as he recovers from a dislocated right shoulder.

Griffey landed on the shoulder while diving for a fly ball on Saturday.

Dr. Timothy Kremchek popped the shoulder back into place at the ballpark on Saturday. X-rays and other tests found no fractures or major injury to the rotator cuff.

Griffey will try to rehabilitate the shoulder rather than have surgery, and optimistically could be playing again in six to 10 weeks, Kremchek said Sunday.

NASCAR | Earnhardt Jr. wins at Talladega

Dale Earnhardt Jr. narrowly avoided an early crash and charged from behind Sunday to win the Aaron's 499, becoming the first driver to win four straight races at Talladega Superspeedway.

Earnhardt, who led nine times for 34 laps in a race in which there was a total of 43 lead changes among 16 drivers, fought off challenges at the end from Jimmie Johnson, Ward Burton and Matt Kenseth.

He fought his way into the lead twice in the last four laps, once with a controversial pass below the yellow line on the track apron.

NBA | Carter likely out for regular season

Vince Carter will probably miss the last six games of the season after spraining his ankle in the final minute of Toronto's game against the New Jersey Nets on Sunday.

Carter will "most likely miss" the remainder of the season, Raptors spokesman Jim LaBumard said.

Carter landed hard on his ankle after taking a shot over Richard Jefferson with 31 seconds remaining in the Raptors' '96-87 loss to the Nets. He was helped to the locker room. X-rays of the ankle were negative.

Golf | Crane gets 1st win in 40th event

Ben Crane planned to play the 18th conservatively, but a 357-yard drive changed that strategy.

Crane made an eagle on the last hole Sunday and beat Bob Tway by four shots at the BellSouth Classic for his first victory in his 40th event.

Crane's eagle at the 18th punctuated a 29 on the back nine, and his 63 tied the course record. His 127 total in the last two rounds is the lowest on tour this season.

Zach Kirk was sitting in the right-field stands with his girlfriend Friday night when Sosa hit a seventh-inning homer that deflected off several sets of hands and came to rest at his feet.

Cats will play familiar course at the Susie Maxwell Classic

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With only two weeks until the Big 12 Championship, the women's golf team is looking for a strong showing in Norman, Okla., this week.

After a third-place finish at the Mountain Collegiate in Tucson, Ariz., two weeks ago, the Cats return to action today at the Susie Maxwell Classic. The tournament will be an important test before the Cats head to the Big 12 Championship in Columbia, Mo., April 21-23. Six of the 16 teams competing in Norman come from the Big 12.

"It's a good tune-up," Coach Kristi Knight said. "I just feel like it can give you some confidence. You like to have a solid tournament when you're heading off to conference."

K-State has been very successful against most of the teams in the field this week, amassing a 19-2-1 record against them.

"So far this year, we've been successful against the teams that are here, with the exception of Baylor. Baylor has beaten us the two times prior to this that we've seen them."

"You want to go out and play well so when you get in the van at the end of the week, you feel good about how you've played."

The week off has helped K-State, but the Cats also had a practice round Sunday. Knight said several of her players, including juniors Christine Boucher and Karen Quintelier played well Sunday.

"Practice has gone fairly well," Knight said. "In the practice round today, Christine hit the ball very well. This is the first time Karen has seen this course, and she looked fairly comfortable. She hit some good shots."

"Miranda (Smith) didn't really hit the ball well today," she said, "but I don't think that means a whole lot. Miranda played fairly well in practice before we got here, so I think by tomorrow she'll be fine."

The 16-team field will compete on the 5,910-yard, par-72 Jimmie Austin OU Golf Course. Knight said most of K-State's players had seen the course and some have played it several times.

"Karen's the only one who hasn't played the course," Knight said. "This will be Miranda and Elise's (Carpentier) third time playing it. They've all played it. Christine and Miranda have both had some really solid rounds on this golf course, and they've had some success."

The experience is valuable, Knight said, but K-State isn't the only experienced team.

"It helps," she said, "but all the teams that are here, we've all been here."

Christine Boucher puts the ball during a tournament last season at Colbert Hills Golf Course.

Cowboys sweep K-State, extend Cats' losing streak to 11 games

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nice weather brought 1,399 fans to see Oklahoma State host K-State Sunday at Allie P. Reynolds Stadium.

But despite pleasant game-time conditions, the big black rain cloud that is K-State's losing streak made yet another appearance.

The skid moved to 11 games, as the Wildcats dropped their third straight to the Cowboys, 11-9.

The loss dropped K-State to 10-19 overall and 0-9 in the Big 12, and the Pokes moved to 21-9, 7-2 adding Sunday's win to an 11-1 victory on Saturday and a 10-1 win Friday.

Despite giving up 11 runs, Coach Mike Clark said he was happy with his offense's nine runs Sunday after the Wildcats mustered a total of two runs in the first two contests.

"We had some good at-bats today," he said. "Offensively, we got back into the gameplan. We had meetings and talked with the guys yesterday and this morning, and I think it did a lot of good."

"The guys were real relaxed in their approach. Even our outs, in a lot of cases, were really hard-hit outs. I feel real good that our offense is back. Now, if we can get the pitching and the defense, we'll be in business."

K-State had a chance Sunday and brought the winning run to the plate in the top of the ninth only to have OSU closer Daniel Rew pick up his fifth save of the year by striking out Brad Anzman and Terry Blunt.

Eleven runs proved to be too many for the Wildcats to overcome. But coming from behind was a theme against Oklahoma State, as K-State's starting pitching continued to struggle to keep the Cats within striking distance.

In game one, the Cowboys got a run in the second and added five more in the third. In the second contest, OSU scored three first-inning runs and added four more in the fourth.

On Sunday, Wildcat starter Kevin Melcher was shelled for six runs in the first.

Clark said his starters' tendency to allow runs early has got to change.

"It's a big problem," he said. "We have to look at things and reevaluate. Obviously, we can't continue to have this kind of performance to start the ballgame every time we go."

K-State will return to action Wednesday when the Cats travel to Wichita to face Wichita State at Eck Stadium before beginning a three-game homestand against Texas A&M on Friday at Frank Myers Field at Tointon Family Stadium.

One more loss will match the longest losing streak by a K-State team in the Clark era.

Clark said his team must find a way to keep teams close.

"They're frustrated, and that's part of the problem," he said. "Guys are trying to hit seven-run homers, steal four bases at once and just trying to do way too much. I talked with the seniors last night, and that's one of the things they talked about."

"They just feel so much pressure when they do get into RBI situations because it's like they have to score five runs because we're always behind."

Spring — flowers and trees blooming. But for those with allergies, spring can be hell.

Rachel Hogan, sophomore in public relations, is extremely sensitive to 38 known allergens. Some of those include pet dander, every Kansas grass and tree she was tested for, mold spores, rag weed, pollen, cockroaches, smoke, milk and aspirin.

"The worst is when people are cutting their grass. I walk by, and I can't breathe," she said.

She said that each day before volleyball practice the team would run around the football field. If the grass was being cut, she would ask to run on the road or in the gym instead.

It was highly physical activities that caused Hogan the most problems, she said.

"When I was in high school, I had attacks because of competitive sports. Now I don't push myself," Hogan said.

"Ever since I found out, I've had two allergy shots a week, year-round," Hogan said.

Hogan was first diagnosed with the milk allergy when she was 6 months old. She was tested for everything else when she was 15.

"Since I've known for so long, it's not tough, but I have asthma also. When my allergies flare up, it makes the asthma really bad," she said. "I don't get to go out as much as I'd like to because I'd spend my time wiping my eyes and sneezing."

Lee Henderson, pharmacy manager at Dillons Westloop, said that wearing a mask, similar to what a doctor wears, is one way for people with allergies to spend more time outside. He said the mask is not very popular because of the appearance.

Henderson

said that this year is not unlike past springs in terms of the amount of prescriptions filled.

Hogan takes Clarinex and has taken Zyrtec in the past. She said she stopped taking Zyrtec because it made her extremely tired. In addition to Clarinex, she's using the nasal inhaler, Rhinocort Aqua.

Many of these drugs are advertised on television. Manhattan pulmonologist Steve Short said that this is good, but cautioned people to do research also.

"Most of them are good, but they need to be used in appropriate ways," Short said. "Most are expensive, and that means a person has to go to the doctor when something cheaper could be used. People need to know what these drugs do."

When Hogan was tested for allergies, she said that the allergist put three lines of purple dots in an area that stretched from her wrist to her elbow on each arm. Then in each dot the allergist injected a serum containing a specific allergen. To test how allergic Hogan was to each allergen, the allergist pricked each of the dots. The resulting welts were then measured by size.

"It burned so bad. I wanted to scratch, but I couldn't. I had to sit there for 20 minutes," she said.

Hogan's allergist said he thought the best thing for her to do was to get allergy shots to build a defense to the allergens.

Hogan receives one shot in each arm every week.

Instead of driving back to her home town of Topeka each week, Hogan gets her shots at Lafene Health Center. She has had to visit the health workers each week for nearly two years.

"They're really nice and try to make it pleasant for me," she said. "When I went in last week I showed them my pictures from spring break."

Sports stars to become pen pals to deployed U.S. soldiers

Shaquille O'Neal, Tiger Woods, Roger Clemens and other sports figures will become pen pals with U.S. military personnel as part of a program sponsored by ESPN.

In the "Jocks to GIs Direct" effort, each sports figure will be paired with one soldier to trade e-mails and have one-on-one Internet chat sessions during the next few months, the network said Thursday.

Correspondence will be published on the ESPN.com Web site and in ESPN The Magazine.

Fund for Nazi-era slave laborers to seek Spielberg's help

Germany's compensation fund for Nazi-era slave laborers said it will seek assistance from director Steven Spielberg to record the testimonies of surviving victims.

The $5.5 billion fund, jointly set up by the German government and industry in 2000, has paid out $2.25 billion to 1.24 million victims so far. But it has drawn criticism for not compensating more victims before they died.

In an effort to keep alive the memory of aging survivors, part of the fund has been set aside for education projects, and officials said Thursday they would seek Spielberg's help for a plan to interview up to 1,000 survivors.

Late-night comedy takes cautious jabs at U.S. war in Iraq

As U.S. forces engage in "shock and awe" tactics in Iraq, the war is getting the mock-and-guffaw treatment from political humorists.

With troops in harm's way and passions strong both in favor and against the war, comedians have had to balance their barbs against broad public sentiment.

"There's a more nationalistic tone than there was even in the first Gulf War. Instead of just making fun of the bad guys, there's now a real 'rah-rah' element," said Robert Lichter, president of the Center for Media and Public Affairs, a nonprofit research organization based in Washington.

The safest target for ridicule remains Saddam Hussein — with many jokes about the Iraqi leader focusing on his conspicuous absence from public view and rumors about his death.

Step Team wins annual Blu Apollo competition

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No booing and no cursing. These were the stipulations for the crowd and for the performers of the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity's fifth-annual Blu Apollo talent competition Saturday night in Forum Hall.

Out of the eight teams that competed, Step Team, a dancing group of seven girls from Leavenworth, won the competition. Comedian T-Hill came in second, and last year's winner, singer TK, came in third.

"Overall we had 13 acts try out. The acts we had we felt were very solid," J.J. Neil, Phi Beta Sigma president, said. "In my opinion, T-Hill was the best just because he really got the crowd into it. But the Step Team definitely deserved second."

Step Team member, Deonce Sawyer, said the group has been performing together for two years, and she was happy with its performance.

The no cursing rule was established to keep the competition clean because it was played live on KSDB-FM 91.9.

Despite the no cursing rule, T-Hill's comedy warranted an advisory warning from Neil.

"We had auditions, and we knew that his act was a little raw. That's why I said something beforehand. 'There's going to be a little cursing,'" Neil said. "I wanted to make that announcement so the people at 91.9 could prepare, put some music on or whatever they needed to do. Even though his act was raw, it was good. He got the crowd into it."

This year was the first time the Blu Apollo was broadcast on the radio, but last year it was televised live on the K-State TV station.

"Hopefully next year we can get it on the air and on TV. Every year all the brothers try to come up with something different, something we could have done better," Neil said.

Phi Beta Sigma member Marvin West warmed up the crowd by hosting a free-style rap exhibition for audience members. He said he felt the show ran smoothly.

"As far as the comments I'm getting, everyone was happy with the show they received. The show let out at a good time as well. Last year it lasted a lot longer," he said.

Competition winners

- 1st place — Step Team
2nd place — T-Hill
3rd place — TK

West also took part in the rapping with a few verses in Spanish.

"I thought that the crowd was warmed up, and that I did a good job getting them up early. And my Spanish deal, it was like they wasn't ready for that," he said.

Mary Reid, senior in psychology, said she agreed with West's impression of the audience's reaction.

"I enjoyed it a lot. It was a really nice program. I really like the Step Team. They were real precise and together and worked well as a team," she said.

"I enjoyed T-Hill a lot, too. His timing was as good as his comedy was — right on the point."

LOSSES | Deans hope to make up for market loss

"We talk through specific problems in a one-on-one basis, and after we go through and explain it, they understand," Klug said. "No one likes to lose money — but they do understand."

Mike Holen, dean of the College of Education, said it was made clear to him that scholarship commitments made to students for the 2003-2004 school year will be honored. However, he said he's still concerned about the 2004-2005 school year.

"For the year following next year all the deans have some concerns," he said. "It is, however, clear that the Foundation can't be paying out significantly more than it earns, or it will affect its long-term ability to provide scholarships."

Carol Kellett, dean of the College of Human Ecology, said regardless of what is happening with investments, her college would be focusing on scholarships this time of year.

"This year we're doing it with that situation in mind," she said.

At the College of Business, Dean Yar Ebadi said because the total impact of the sagging stock market isn't just on scholarships, he's tried to find private money from donors and friends of the college to fund supplementary salaries for some faculty next year.

Ebadi said the stock market's impact on the Foundation, it will cost his college around $400,000.

"I do have concerns," he said. "The KSU Foundation and the university and we as deans are all trying to find out how we can provide the kind of scholarships that we've been giving in the past — that is a challenge."

Holen said he hasn't heard complaints from students, and thinks it's because media outlets have done a good job of explaining the situation to students and parents.

Ebadi said he has visited with his faculty regularly as well as his student advisory council about the stock market situation.

"The Foundation and the university are trying very hard too," he said. "Hopefully we'll find another alternative to cover this."

CUTS | Budget constraints to affect local schools

years and will end his term June 30. He said the district has been able to avoid completely cutting programs so far.

"There is, to some extent, less money available for teachers to use for their classrooms," he said. "There are fewer dollars for field trips and fewer dollars for classroom supplies."

Not to mention fewer teachers.

Associate Superintendent Robert Seymour said the district has released 22 teachers, two administrators and several classified staff in the last few years.

"We're trying to keep our services to our students as a high priority so we haven't done anything that significantly impacts students directly," he said.

Seymour said the district closed two elementary buildings, Bluemont and Eugene Field, last year, and has lost 1,000 students throughout the last several years.

In fact, the total student population is similar to enrollment figures from 1964, said Bruce Stiles, director of business services for the district. However, Stiles said it's a common trend across the state.

"I'd say nearly two-thirds of districts are readily losing students annually," he said. "It comes down to attrition. The number of students graduating as seniors is more than the numbers in the kindergarten class."

Seymour said a loss in students also means additional funding problems.

"Given the budget on a per pupil basis, that makes a difference in our budget in state funding," he said.

To make up for some of its losses in state funding, the district has raised local taxes and has been aggressive in its applications for grant money, Seymour said.

Weaver said the school board also reviewed budget committee recommendations last week and will begin making cuts later this spring.

"The superintendent said we would need to make around $1 million in cuts, and it would be hard to do that without cutting back on support for a lot of programs," he said.

Stiles said no cuts have been made for the next school year, but are expected as mid-May and June approach.

"We expect to see cuts," he said. "We're basically in a wait-and-see mode as far as state legislature, but by mid-May we'll be wanting to think real seriously about making cuts."

Making cuts is never easy though, Weaver said.

"People sometimes make a three-way split of the schools into the basics, electives and activities," he said. "Speaking for myself, it's very hard to assign cuts to these areas. All of these areas are important."

Weaver said other districts have already made cuts to art and music programs, as well as athletic programs.

"There are other school districts that have changed their athletic system to pay to play, so there are big fees to be a member of the football team," he said. "Some district had to go to some forms of distance learning because they couldn't afford to hire a science teacher. And some had to change its transportation policies."

Jenney Ryan, art teacher at Amanda Arnold and Lee elementary schools, said the stability of the art program isn't a concern yet, but could be if budget problems continue.

Ryan, who has taught art for 16 years, said students need an important foundation in classes like art and music.

"Students that aren't getting art in various school districts are removing a critical part of our curriculum that all students need," she said. "It's also affecting the future ability for young people to decide if they want to go into the field of art or any fields where they want to use visual arts."

Ryan said cutting such programs in the Manhattan area could have an adverse effect on K-State students as well.

"If art programs are cut, that would also cut student teaching in Manhattan public schools," she said.

Lana Hufnagel, vocal music teacher at Amanda Arnold, said music is also an important part of students' lives.

"Research has shown that students who have had enriched environments with musical training have better perception, self esteem and discipline," she said.

Whatever cuts will be made will depend on state legislative actions, Weaver said.

"I'm hopeful that we won't have to continue in this contracting mode, but we are then going to really have a problem if the legislature does not recognize public education as one of its responsibilities," he said. "Since I've been on the board it has never been this bad — the last three years has been the worst, and I don't see it getting better in the near future."

to cook for them every day. We also have a public meal every Saturday," Aly said.

During the rest of the year, Aly said the mosque has public dinners nearly every month for Muslims and their friends.

Another traditional food is the Hungarian dish, baklava, which Aly said is very popular in his native country of Egypt.

Open house visitor Lorraine Walterschied said she learned about Muslims' prayer.

"I learned a little bit about how they pray. The pillars of the religion was explained to us," she said.

The five pillars include: There is no god but Allah, to pray five times a day, to fast during the month of Ramadan, to give to charity and to make a pilgrimage to Mecca once during your lifetime.

Another aspect of Islam that Walterschied said she learned about was the ablution — the act of washing to prepare for prayer.

Aly said Muslims wash before they pray so that their prayers will be accepted.

The first act is to wash the hands, then wash the mouth with the right hand three times. Then, inhale and exhale water from your right hand three times, wash your face three times, wash your right hand up to the elbow three times, wash your left hand up to the elbow three times, rub water on your head, rub water on your ears, wash your right foot up to ankle three times.

The ablution is finished after washing the left foot up to the ankle three times.

If a Muslim does not have access to water, the worshiper touches the ground, and then raises his or her hands to the sky, Aly said.

Nathan Hendricks, sophomore in agricultural economics, said he came to the mosque as preparation for a trip to Indonesia.

"I'm planning on going to Indonesia this summer," Hendricks said. "I'll be living with a Muslim family, so I wanted to learn a little bit more about it."

His ability to laugh at the irony of racial barriers, as he makes you think about how we can change, is unique unto itself. "End of Racism" speaks the truth about the need to develop non-conformist dialogue and attitudes against racial bias across all races. Moss humorously delivers the message that the end of racism is an all-inclusive activity not based on our skin colors, but our humanity. A gifted lecturer and comedian, Moss takes serious topics and makes them "universally understandable" to the masses. While he speaks to your intellect, he has the rare ability to speak to your soul.

Troops target Saddam

Intelligence sources say Saddam may have been killed

By Chris Tomlinson and David Esposito
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — American troops and tanks bore down on Baghdad with unstoppable force Monday, seizing two of Saddam Hussein's opulent palaces and bombing a building where the Iraqi leader and other regime officials were believed to be staying.

America At War

A lone B-1B bomber carried out the strike on what U.S. officials described as a "leadership target" — senior Iraqi officials possibly including Saddam and his two sons. It was not immediately clear whether any of them were killed or wounded.

Earlier Monday, U.S. and British officials said they believed Saddam's top commander in southern Iraq had been killed in a U.S. airstrike.

The attacks came as American forces maneuvered through the capital with near impunity.

Some Iraqi soldiers jumped into the Tigris River to flee the advancing column of more than 100 armored vehicles. A dozen others were captured and placed inside a hastily erected POW pen on the grounds of the bombed-out, blue-and-gold-domed New Presidential Palace.

An estimated 600 to 1,000 Iraqi troops were killed during the operation, said Col. David Perkins. "We had a lot of suicide attackers today," he said. "These guys are going to die in droves ... They keep trying to ram the tanks with car bombs."

U.S. troops toppled a 40-foot statue of Saddam and seized another of his many palaces, the Sojoud. Tank-killing A-10 Warthog planes and pilotless drones provided air cover as Americans briefly surrounded another prominent symbol of Saddam's power, the Information Ministry, as well as the Al-Rashid hotel.

The attack on the leadership target — reminiscent of the opening volley of the war on March 19 aimed at Saddam — occurred in Baghdad's upscale Mansour neighborhood. U.S. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said American intelligence learned Monday morning of a high-level meeting in Baghdad between senior Iraqi intelligence officials and, possibly, Saddam and his two sons, Qusai and Odai.

The bombardment left a huge hole where the building had been and reduced three adjoining houses to a heap of concrete, mangled iron rods and furniture.

A B-1B bomber dropped four 2,000-pound bunker-penetrating bombs on a residential building. "We are confirming that a leadership target was indeed hit very hard," said Marine Maj. Brad Bartelt, a spokesman for U.S. Central Command in Qatar. He had no information of the results of the attack.

It was the third straight day the Army penetrated Saddam's seat of power. This time, though, there were plans to stay. Rather than withdrawing at at

Liquor bill defeated in Senate

Legislature may revisit Sunday sales issue April 30

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

The future of Sunday liquor sales in Manhattan still is unclear after the Kansas Senate defeated a bill Friday that would have allowed local governments to make the decision to sell on Sundays.

The Legislature adjourned for recess on Friday and will reconvene April 30, when the issue could be considered again.

Rickel-McMillin Liquor owner Mark McMillin said his store would most likely stay open on Sundays if sales of packaged liquors were legalized.

"Maybe it's time to be more aggressive as a state," McMillin said. "We don't want to be left behind the times."

McMillin said he sees benefits with either decision. As a store owner, he enjoys an automatic day off, but continuing sales on Sundays could increase business.

Sunday liquor sales took center stage after a judge upheld Wyandotte County retailers' right to continue selling alcohol on Sundays. The judge said the Liquor Control Act, which bans Sunday sales, did not uniformly apply across the state, and Wyandotte County retailers were therefore not bound by it.

McMillin said Sunday liquor sales are more important to retailers in counties that border Missouri because that state allows alcohol sales on Sundays.

"If I'm in that county and can see people driving across the line — there's an importance there," he said. "Luckily, we're more centrally located. It's a luxury of being so far from the state line."

The so called "blue law" that prohibits packaged alcohol sales on Sundays is part of the 1949 Liquor Control Act. Kansas was one of the last

Discussion of war becoming common topic in many classrooms

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

The war in Iraq has made its existence felt in the atmosphere of classrooms.

Lloyd Thomas, professor of economics, said he discusses the economical aspects of it.

"The war involves increased spending and budgets, so I discuss the implications of war for the economy," Thomas said. "Our economy is basically on hold right now."

Lyman Baker, English in-

War Hits Home

structor, said he, too, discusses the war in his classes.

"We discuss what the implications are for adopting this factor or that factor as justification for going to war and invading another country, like liberating others, preventing weapons of mass destruction or enforcing U.N. resolutions and using war as a means of doing it," he said.

Cultural anthropology classes have been discussing another aspect of the war, Pamela Cook, sophomore in psychology, said.

"We have discussed different cultures and how they have a way of thinking different from our own," she said. "We talk about how we should be more culturally acceptable on war topics — that they have lives and families and that they are people, too."

Baker said he thought a faculty panel discussion to address the pros and cons of the war would be a good idea for students and other faculty.

"It would be a 10-minute discussion from each side. The debate could then be opened to the audience with a neutral mediator, he said. So far, no faculty members have been interested, Baker said.

Cook said that with the war progressing, many people are anxious to discuss it.

"It's an appropriate topic," Cook said.

"It's on people's minds, and they want to seek out others' opinions."

Baker said hearing others' opinions can be beneficial.

"The classroom is a useful setting for discussing a topic like war," he said.

"A respectful, organized discussion can take place, as opposed to a television debate with two people just yelling at each other."

Thomas said a university is about freedom of expression.

"If something like this can't be discussed in a university setting, I don't know where it can," he said.

Flight attendant charged with drugging infant's apple juice

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

In March, former Northwest Airlines flight attendant Daniel Reed Cunningham was charged with slyly drugging the apple juice of a severely rambunctious 19-month-old baby during a 2002 flight. The mother became suspicious after tasting the juice and slipped some into a container for later testing (which revealed Xanax).

Latest news

Scientists at the University of Southern California will soon begin testing an artificial brain prosthesis (a silicon chip that mimics the hippocampus), which, if successful, can help people who cannot store future and recent memories of their experiences.

One problem with the project (according to a March story in New Scientist): Subjects might not remember anything about the research or consenting to participate in it. (Another problem: Nearly everyone is glad not to be able to recall some negative experiences.)

The small Jewish Skver sect of Hasidim (New Square, N.Y.) was energized in March when a fishcutter in the sect (along with his Christian co-worker) swore they heard a 20-pound carp shout apocalyptic warnings in Hebrew. The co-worker thought the carp was merely Satanic, but Zalmen Rosen, 57, said the fish's soul was cautioning that the end is near, perhaps because of war in Iraq.

Although the news spread throughout the community (aided by a feature in The New York Times), the carp itself met an inglorious end when the co-worker butchered it and sold it for gefilte fish.

No longer weird

Adding to the list of stories that were formerly weird but which now occur with such frequency that they must be retired from circulation: Parent(s) who leave young children home alone for days at a time, certain that they can care for themselves, while they frolic, as a 31-year-old Placentia, Calif., woman did in December, leaving her kids, ages 7 and 4, for three weeks to go see a North Carolina man she had met on the Internet.

Weird science

Israeli Aircraft Industries Ltd. is now testing an "airplane" the size of a credit card (flight time: 20 minutes), containing cameras and transmitters to relay intelligence from battlefields, or from the insides of buildings by going through open windows. And the company TrapTec (Escondido, Calif.)

is now in the final testing of "anti-graffiti" sensors that are so responsive that they can identify taggers who use spray paint just by the distinctive hissing sound of the aerosol can (and automatically tell police the taggers' location, via global positioning system technology).

According to a January Los Angeles Times profile, biologist Gerry Kuzyk recently came upon, in a remote area of the Yukon, an 8-foot-high, half-mile swath of what he learned was caribou droppings; since no caribou had been sighted in the area for over 100 years, Kuzyk concluded that it was a massive, centuries-old accumulation that had been frozen but recently melted.

And the Reuters news service reported in February that Antarctica's oldest building has become largely unvisitable because it is being blocked in by droppings from the area's 100,000 Adelie penguins.

In a three-hour operation in February at the Nil Ratan Sircar Medical College Hospital in Calcutta, India, doctors performed what they claimed was the world's first penis transplant. Dr. Ashok Ray, lead surgeon, had been in the process of removing a troublesome second penis on a 1-year-old boy when someone elsewhere in the hospital informed him that a baby boy had just been born without one.

Leading economic indicators

New Concierge Services: In Melbourne, Australia, in March, John Stark, 60, and his wife and son pleaded guilty to running a scheme in which the Starks "ordered" large quantities of upscale goods, which two shoplifter-associates would then go "acquire" for them so that the Starks could resell them in the family's Shopaholic discount stores.

And a burglary ring in New York City was even more specific: According to March indictments, they stole only items specifically requested by individual patrons who had heard they could drop off a wish list and then buy the items at a deep discount when the goods "came in."

New frontiers in advertising

In February, a British ad agency began paying college students about $20 for each three-hour stint in which they walk around in public with a company's logo semipermanently tattooed on their foreheads.

And in December, another British agency signed up Sony Ericsson to pay for draping its advertising messages over large dogs whose owners accepted free dog-walking service in public parks in exchange for allowing the "moving billboards."

Bush, Blair to discuss plans for rebuilding Iraq after war ends

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland— President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair began to focus on post-war rebuilding in Iraq on Monday, as Secretary of State Colin Powell said, "The hostilities phase is coming to a conclusion."

Bush and Powell stepped off Air Force One under gray, threatening skies and went immediately to a meeting with Blair at Hillsborough Castle outside Belfast. In addition to Iraq, the leaders were discussing ways to revive peace efforts in Northern Ireland and the Middle East.

The meeting came as U.S. troops stormed one of Saddam's palaces in Baghdad and dozens of U.S. tanks rumbled through the capital. Powell looked beyond the fighting and said, "It is time for all of us to think about the post-hostility stage—how we create a representative government consisting of all elements of Iraqi society."

The reconstruction question has divided the president's advisers and the United States and Britain. Blair wants deeper U.N. involvement in postwar Iraq than Bush, who seeks a transitional governing authority consisting of Iraqi exiles and people living in the country now. Powell played down the differences, saying, "There isn't as much debate and disagreement as you might read in the newspapers."

The secretary said that the United States is sending a team to Iraq this week to begin laying the groundwork for an interim authority. He said the United Nations can provide humanitarian aid and add legitimacy to the interim authority, but he did not describe a role for the U.N. beyond that. Powell made clear that the U.S.-British coalition should play the leading role.

"The coalition, having taken the political risk and having paid the cost in lives, must have a leading role," Powell said. Powell, one-time chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said it was impossible to predict how long the war would last.

He also said he could not foresee how long it would be before Iraq is self-governing. He said that depends on how long the war lasts and whether "we have truly broken the back of the regime."

Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern, the other leader invited to the summit, said Monday he would tell Bush the United Nations should have a primary role in the reconstruction of Iraq.

"We want to see a new administration that will have greater legitimacy if it is under the (authority) of the international community," he told reporters in Dublin.

It wasn't clear whether the summit would produce firm agreements on postwar Iraq. White House spokesman Sean McCormack said the meeting would "further the process of considering these questions about post-Saddam Iraq, reconstruction, humanitarian aid."

The Bush-Blair meeting is the two leaders' third face-to-face session in just over three weeks.

By agreeing to Blair's request to meet in Belfast, Bush is taking the boldest step of his presidency into the decades-old conflict in Northern Ireland, and adding a set of issues that complicates his trip.

Then-President Bill Clinton made three trips to Northern Ireland, the most of any U.S. president. Clinton's envoy, former Sen. George Mitchell, led the Belfast negotiations that produced the British province's Good Friday peace accord of 1998. That pact sought to end three decades of sectarian conflict in the British territory that saw more than 3,600 killings.

Bush has shown less interest, delegating the business of following Belfast developments to a senior State Department official, Richard Haass.

Blair, a stalwart ally of Bush in the Iraq war, hopes presidential backing will strengthen his hand when he publishes his government's new Northern Ireland plans by Thursday, the fifth anniversary of the Good Friday pact.

McCormack said Bush's visit was meant to lend support to Blair's efforts.

The location of the summit, Hillsborough Castle outside Belfast, shields Bush and Blair from the kind of mass anti-war protests that have engulfed London and other European cities.

But there was unprecedented security at the castle, and in Red Cross blood drive sets goal of 700 pints

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will have the opportunity to help save lives this week.

The American Red Cross K-State blood drive is 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily until Friday at the K-State Student Union. Two other locations also will be on campus—1 to 7 p.m. Thursday at Haymaker Hall and 4 to 8:30 p.m. through Wednesday at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"K-State athletes will be making appearances each day," said Scott McFall, student coordinator of the blood drive. "We themed each day of the week for a different team."

Today the football team will stop by, he said.

"Coach Snyder and the team have signed a football that will be given away in a drawing to a donor. The team should be here around 3:30."

"Hopefully, they'll bring some signed posters and sign autographs for those who want them," he said.

On Wednesday, the women's volleyball team will give away a signed volleyball, McFall said.

"Thursday is club team recognition," he said. "That's for teams that aren't sponsored by the university. Any of them who want to come in should come in."

On Friday, the women's basketball team will be at the blood drive. The team also will have a signed ball, he said.

McFall said he hopes students stop by one of the locations to donate blood and have a chance to win a signed ball. The goal for this week is 700 pints, he said.

"In the spring, we usually have fewer donors than in the fall. We try to do more to draw people in."

He said organizers are giving away free T-shirts to donors as incentives.

"We're trying to recruit new donors," he said. "The hardest thing is getting people to donate for the first time."

"Once they donate that first time, it's so easy to donate again. It never hurts to try."

Seminars help debtors with finances

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Being in college is tough on the pocketbook.

Housing and Credit Counseling Inc. and the United Way of the Flint Hills want to ease some of the discomfort of debt by offering a free seminar on budgeting.

"Budgeting is not something we learned a lot of growing up, and a lot of people were not prepared in school or being raised for budgeting," said Kim Chrest, a certified credit counselor who teaches the Discover More Dollars seminar.

The Discover More Dollars seminar is offered every two months to anyone who wants to attend.

The seminar is open to people who feel they are struggling financially or feel they need assistance with budgeting, she said.

"It's a good way to pick up some good tips on tracking expenses or saving money," Crest said.

Discover More Dollars

■ The seminar is from 6 to 7:30 tonight at the Manhattan Public Library. Although the class is free, participants need to be registered to attend.
■ To register for the Discover More Dollars seminar in Manhattan, call 785-539-6666, extension 350.

Marilyn Stanley, community relations manager at Housing and Credit Counseling Inc., said anyone can attend the classes, but she encourages those who feel confused about handling money to get registered.

"We want to reach people who don't have a lot of experience in how to handle money and people who may be struggling with debt," she said. "It's for the general public—college students, middle-aged people or senior citizens. It's helpful for all ages."

Chrest said participants should expect to get basic lessons on budgeting during the class.

"It's an opportunity to get basic information that people can build on," she said.

Stanley said she feels the classes are successful, since they reach those people who have interest and need budgeting skills.

Manhattan is not the only city where these classes are conducted. Classes are also offered in Emporia, Topeka and Lawrence.

"It is geared more toward college students in college towns," Stanley said. "We do a lot of budgeting, goal setting and how to line out a pay-check-to-paycheck budget."

TO THE POINT

Sunday liquor sales should be decided locally

Kansas senators defeated a bill last Friday that would allow local governments — rather than the state — to make the decision of allowing Sunday packaged liquor sales.

However, when the Legislature reconvenes at the end of the month, state leaders need to realize the opportunities that would arrive if each county was allowed to make the overall decision.

By allowing local governments to take a stance on the Sunday sales, the state could find its financial situations improved by the change.

Counties with universities, such as Riley, could benefit by the decision and bring money to the Manhattan community during a time when money is tight.

Other communities may choose to continue not allowing Sunday liquor sales, if this fits the atmosphere and desire of those living in the area.

If the Legislature decided to approve the bill, each county can fill its own needs, and as a result, create a more unified law that has the support of everyone in the state.

MATURE CONSEQUENCES

Deserting a child should be a last resort for a desperate, young parent

Pregnancy can come as a shock to many college students. Options are explored by one or both of the people involved: keeping the child, abortion, adoption or, in desperation, some chose safe havens.

During the last three years, safe haven laws have been set up and voted into affect in 37 states, including our own in 2000.

In Kansas, a baby that is up to 45 days old can be left with an employee at any medical facility, fire department or police department and, by law, there will be no questions asked and anonymity is preserved.

According to www.safeplacefornewborns.org, the need for safe havens is a result of a crisis in the United States.

"There is an escalating crisis in the United States. Mothers are keeping their pregnancy a secret, and then discarding the child after birth."

The Web site also said that the person that left the child may return to reclaim it but must go through social services.

A new study published and researched by the Adoption Institute points out the "unintended consequences" of this widely implemented law.

Some negative consequences besides "undermining adoptions through established legal procedures" include "inducing abandonment by women who otherwise would not have done so because it is perceived as 'easier' than receiving parenting counseling or making adoption plans."

This argument is based solely on speculation. Every parent can go through considerably unique emotional states when faced with a decision as difficult as giving up a child. Parents may act in haste or deny their condition until it is too late. This gives them one last chance to do what may be best for their child and themselves.

Another argument is that it encourages parental irresponsibility. Usually if a woman gets pregnant who doesn't want to, it is a result of an irresponsible act. It can be due to a lack of contraceptives or simply a lack of education. Who says that responsibility will bounce into affect once a pregnancy is discovered?

As girls lose their virginity at younger and younger ages, this option is necessary for the assistance of their needs. This law may preserve the lives of babies that could have been discarded in unsafe and potentially dangerous places.

According to a 1995 FBI report that was reviewed by CNN nearly five babies are killed weekly. There were 304 infants killed in 1991 and 249 in 1995.

Among cases of infant slaying, Melissa Drexler of Freehold, New Jersey, gave birth in the bathroom at her senior prom, asphyxiated the newborn and returned to the dance floor. In another case, also out of New Jersey, two college freshmen discarded their newborn in a motel dumpster.

It is clear that these parents were not ready for the responsibility, for whatever reason, but without the safe haven option murder was their choice.

The law may have implicated flaws that can send a signal to young people that assuming responsibility of their babies is acceptable but this can fall on deaf ears, after the fact.

These babies will not have the life they deserve, or will not be given the chance to live, if they stay with a parent that cannot or will not fully provide for them.

Deserting a child should only be a final option and is only for the desperate, but it seems to be a necessary evil. The law is discouraging, because irresponsibility is prevalent enough that it was established, but it is saving innocent lives.

Chemical Engineering skit disrespectful, harmful to the development of tolerance that university programs try to embrace

I am writing this letter because I have recently been deeply offended by the Department of Chemical Engineering of Kansas State University. Indeed, I found the 2003 Open House skit, performed by the students of this department, to be very offensive and insulting toward the French people, not only to those living in this country but also around the world.

Although there are some political tensions between our two countries concerning the recent world events, I do not think that the comments that were made on that Friday afternoon were justified. According to the skit, French people always give up. They haven't won a war in 200 years.

First of all, I would like to emphasize the lack of knowledge of this department concerning French history. Under Napoleon I only, several victories were recorded between 1804 and 1814.

Second, unlike the current government of the United States of America, the French people believe in peaceful diplomatic actions in order to solve important issues, as well as sparing innocent human lives. What is so great about winning wars anyway? Leaving thousands of people homeless, orphaned or widowed? Therefore, I believe France seems to be a more peaceful country than the United States of America.

Finally, I am outraged to see that all the efforts that were — and are — made by the Department of Ethnic Studies, for example, to encourage diversity on campus, are totally diminished by the derogatory behavior of this department.

For a country that is fighting against racism, stereotypes and human equality, I found it disgusting that K-State should breed this type of behavior.

On behalf of the French community here in Manhattan, which heard about this incident, I am telling you that the miserable performance of the Chemical Engineering students during the parade of the 2003 Open House was a disgrace to any human equality and to the respect of everybody's differences. I am actually very surprised to hear so much hostility against the people that helped create the foundations of this country. I am not the only person that is angered by this either. Indeed, students of all nationalities expressed their concern and disappointment to me.

I do not know if Dr. Gehrke had a chance to discuss with the 2003 Open House team of his department concerning the skit of the parade. I secretly hope that he did not, for the sake of his own conscience.

We cannot go back in time and change what happened. I hope that my frustration concerning this matter will be beneficial to his department for any future actions, including but not restricted to the yearly Open House parade.

Pro-war demonstrators should not try to drown out voice of anti-war demonstrators; both arguments deserve fair treatment

I'm writing because I was very disturbed to read in Jessica Pitt's article about the pro-war counter protest last week that some students tried to drown out the anti-war protesters' views with loudspeakers in Seaton Hall.

Pitts quoted Aaryn Grauer as saying "I don't agree with them. We need to be here, and we need to be loud."

I was originally going to e-mail Grauer to ask him whether he would think it appropriate, if he were arguing with a friend in a residence hall, to just put his hand over his friend's mouth every time he or she wanted to speak. But then it seemed to me that the issue is important enough that it should be discussed in the Collegian, perhaps in an editorial.

If the pro-war demonstrators feel their arguments are persuasive, then they should stage their own demonstration and rely on their arguments to convince onlookers instead of trying to muzzle anti-war demonstrators and prevent their arguments from being heard.

Obviously, in any dispute, each side believes it is right. It would not be good for democracy if one side said that "because we're really right, we're going to shut up our opponents."

And, occasionally at a university, you can learn something by listening to other people's opinions.

Author explains African conflicts

Mazrui says partnership necessary to help continent

By Tina Deines
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Global efforts can help heal the problems of post-colonial Africa, an African studies expert said Monday night.

Ali M. Mazrui, from Binghamton University, State University of New York, used a series of paradoxes to illustrate the title of his speech, "The African Condition: Today's Problems, Tomorrow's Prospects."

The lecture was sponsored in part by several organizations, including the Lou Douglas Lecture Series and the Donald J. Adamchak Distinguished Lecture series.

Mazrui, author of more than 20 books, followed his lecture by signing his book "The Power of Babel: Language and Governance in Africa's Experience," which he co-wrote with Alamin M. Mazrui.

The first African paradox, he said, was that during the second half of the 20th century, there were more conflicts between black people than between black and white people.

Secondly, he said, artificial borders within the continent presented a problem. Due to colonization, non-existent borders have been drawn within Africa, bringing together groups with no pre-existing knowledge of each other.

The third paradox Mazrui presented was religion and ethnicity. These are two main sources of conflict in Africa, he said.

He called his fourth paradox identities and resources.

"While white against black has been a clash of ethnicity, black against black has been a clash of resources," Mazrui said.

The fifth paradox was modern weapons and pre-modern armies.

He said the main problem was that armies were not ready for the latest technology, which is the opposite of the past situation in Africa.

Dr. Ali Mazrui gives a lecture in Forum Hall of the K-State Student Union. Mazrui's lecture was titled "The African Condition: Today's Problems, Tomorrow's Prospects" and was presented in part by the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

"In general, the weapons in Africa at the time of independence were less modern, but the armies were more disciplined and professional," Mazrui said.

Mazrui's sixth paradox dealt with dual versus plural societies. A plural society, like that of the United States, contains many cultures, while a dual society has two.

Mazrui said a dualistic society has many problems, including prolonged stalemate and separatism.

The seventh paradox Mazrui presented was regional versus ethnic dualism, while his eighth paradox compared civil war with interstate war.

"Africa has relatively few wars between states, and considering how artificial the lines are, you wonder why," Mazrui said.

He said the majority of conflict was within the African nations.

Mazrui discussed the problem of tolerance versus hate for his ninth paradox.

"Africa has a tradition of limited memory of hate," he said. "Africans have a short memory of hate."

For his next paradox, he spoke about inequalities in gender issues.

Women, Mazrui said, have a much greater ambiguity in their societal roles.

"They are supposed to be the custodians of water, the custodians of earth and the custodians of fire," he said.

Mazrui proposed to help fix this problem in the Legislature by reserving a number of seats for women until more political equality is seen.

Organizational problems was Mazrui's 11th paradox. He proposed that several organizational councils be established in Africa to help promote organization throughout the continent.

Mazrui also spoke about the AIDS crisis in Africa.

He said the poverty of the continent was a critical factor in the development of the disease across Africa.

"One of the causes for the collapse of the immune system is poverty," Mazrui said.

"Africa is caught in the cross-fire. In general, not all conflicts of Africa are in fact born in Africa."

Health officials begin to see stabilization with flu-like illness

By Laura Meckler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The number of people infected by the mysterious flu-like illness dubbed SARS is beginning to stabilize, giving health officials hope that the disease may be coming under control, a top Bush administration official said Monday.

The numbers continue to creep up for severe acute respiratory syndrome. Worldwide, more than 2,300 people have been sickened, and the death toll hit 100 on Monday. There are now 148 U.S. cases in 30 states with no deaths.

"I think we've started to stabilize in the number of cases. We're not seeing these large jumps every day," said Jerry Hauer, acting assistant secretary for public health preparedness at the Department of Health and Human Services. "We're hoping that this lack of a rapid growth is a true indicator that maybe it's slacking off a bit."

In an interview with The Associated Press, Hauer added that it's too early to declare victory. "We don't know yet whether ... we're through act one of a two-act play or whether we're just four lines into a three-act play."

With China a hotbed for new respiratory bugs, Hauer said, U.S. officials are working to install health officials in China who could monitor events year round.

He said that officials expect to distribute a test within a week that can definitively diagnose the new virus. That would allow laboratories around the nation to easily settle whether a patient is truly infected with SARS, or is sick with a more common bug.

And he said officials are baffled as to why U.S. patients are less sick than those in Canada, where SARS has forced thousands of people in Toronto to be quarantined and has killed 10.

"It might be that some of these folks in Canada just got more of the virus, were in closer contact," he said. "Any theory I give you at this point in time would just be a theory."

Testifying before a congressional committee, top health officials cautioned that things may get worse.

"This has very quickly become an international epidemic," Dr. Julie Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, told the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee. "We don't know where this is going to go. We have to be prepared for this to continue to spread."

Officials believe the virus originated in Guangdong, a southern province of China, where respiratory illnesses often start and spread. Chinese officials kept news of the disease secret for months, allowing SARS to spread before international health authorities could begin to fight it.

Hauer hopes that will change if international experts are stationed there permanently.

"If you've got people on the ground, you have a much better sense as to what's going on," he said. "I'm optimistic at this point that we will have some kind of presence after this is all over."

Just Monday, Chinese government officials reported that the disease had spread farther than they initially reported. State television reported one SARS death each in the provinces of Shanxi in the north, Sichuan in the west and Hunan in central China — the first reported fatalities in those areas and an indication the disease was more widespread than previously acknowledged.

He said the international health authorities to be stationed in China could come from the CDC or from the CDC working with the World Health Organization.

Each year, the U.S. government watches China closely in an effort to predict what strain of flu is likely to spread around the globe.

Offseason gives Bramlage time to recover from hectic winter schedule

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thousands of fans and dozens of events have taken place during the school year. Following commencement, May 16-17, Bramlage finally gets a rest.

"We go into a lot of issues that we can only take care of when we have down time," said Charles Thomas, assistant athletic director for facilities operations. "We do a lot of painting and maintenance on our units."

Maintenance includes fixing and cleaning more than three miles of benches, nearly 3,000 chair-backs, and more than 90 doors around the perimeter. Lights and scoreboards are checked over, restroom facilities are maintained and painting begins. The quarter-mile long concourse, already covered in more than 3,000 gallons of royal purple, gets a touch-up.

That doesn't mean Bramlage is strewn with scrub pails and paint brushes in the offseason, though.

Tickers endanger productivity

Small reminders tick away efficiency of work day

Sports tickers — they were invented to keep crazies like you and me from coming unglued when confined to cubicles and classrooms far away from the world's arenas where we'd rather be.

They're a subtle reminder that you're missing something and that if you're efficient, you can catch the last inning or two.

But a warning to any and all who will listen, mlb.com's Gameday and kstatesports.com's Game Tracker must be approached with caution.

I've learned the hard way this spring.

Until recently, I've been able to harness the power of sports information via the point-and-click method, but the problem hit a new low this past weekend.

While K-State's baseball team was busy losing its 11th straight in Stillwater, and as a full slate of Major League Baseball got under way Sunday, I was hunched over my Mac trying my hardest to summon the fabled sports editor strength and finish my work.

It's my job after all, and I get paid pretty well for it.

Nevertheless, while gathering briefs and wading through Wes Marfield's tennis story, I was caught in a nightmarish trap that didn't even exist 15 years ago.

Golf team struggles in Oklahoma match

Team endures worst season round just two weeks before Big 12 Championship play

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This wasn't the way K-State planned to play with only two weeks until the Big 12 Championships.

K-State fired its worst round of the 2002-03 season Monday in the first round of the Susie Maxwell Classic in Norman, Okla. The Cats fired a 325 in the first round on Monday and only managed to shave seven strokes off in the afternoon round.

"It was just a rough day," Coach Kristi Knight said. "Christine (Boucher) is the only player that had a nice round this morning. Then this afternoon, everybody did a little bit better, except Christine kind of struggled.

"She really played pretty well," Knight said, "but she had two holes that really hurt her. It just wasn't a good day. Not a lot of things went well for us today. We'll go at it again tomorrow and see if we can finish on a high note and move up a little bit."

K-State sits in eighth place, 39 strokes behind tournament leader and host Oklahoma, who finished with a score of 604 on Monday. Boucher led K-State with an 11-over-par score of 155. The next closest Wildcat was Miranda Smith, who came in 23rd after the first day.

Knight said the opening two rounds were a result of a number of things, but mainly physical and mental mistakes.

"I think it was a little bit of both," she said. "Starting out, Miranda's (Smith) back has been bothering her, it was cold today and even though she saw the trainer and got some heat on it, she wasn't able to really swing at it."

The biggest problem K-State faced all day was making par. The Cats were plagued all day by the double-bogey, something they have avoided all season.

"We just had too many double-bogey's," Knight said. "That's something we've done pretty well at avoiding. When it seemed like one of them made a mistake, made a bad swing, it turned in to a double or a triple instead of just a bogey."

"We've been doing so much better this season at avoiding big numbers,"

Horseshoes among lesser-known intramurals

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Softballs won't be the only thing thrown around at the the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex this spring.

Intramural horseshoes is also available to those who chose not to participate in other sports, Assistant Director of Intramurals John Wondra said. Singles competition is available in the fall while doubles horseshoes is offered in the spring.

"For some of them, it's just a chance to get some recreation and get some exercise," Wondra said.

"They might have had some knowledge of the activity before they became a student at K-State. Others, maybe they got introduced to the activity through one of their friends."

Marc Rundell, senior in agribusiness, said that having a horseshoe pit in his yard influenced his decision to sign up.

"It's kind of a backyard sport deal," Rundell said. "We threw at the start of the year because we had a pit in our backyard. We saw the opportunity come up for intramurals and thought 'why not.'"

While Rundell was aware of the opportunity to compete in intramural horseshoes, Wondra said many students probably have no idea of all the sports the Rec offers. In addition to horseshoes, Wondra said miniature golf, water polo, bowling, wallyball, whiffleball, wrist-wrestling and the track meet are also lesser known by students.

"Those would be some of the ones that if you asked a student if it was offered on campus, I doubt they would know about," Wondra said.

Horseshoes is also set up differently than other intramural activities. Instead of brackets being posted with match times, they post their opponent's contact information and allow them to set the match up based on their individual schedules.

"It seems to work out for students that way," Wondra said. "It seems to work better for their schedules."

While allowing participants to set up matches might allow them to work around their schedules, it can also lead to procrastination and missed deadlines.

"At times, they will get lazy, or they'll procrastinate," Wondra said. "For the individual dual sports, they're on a deadline as to when each matchup must be played, and sometimes they wait until the last day to contact their opponents."

Horseshoes is also one of the activities that requires less athleticism, which may appeal to some students. Rundell said it was more like bowling than any of the other intramural activities he's participated in.

"It will compare more to bowling than the others because it's not really athletic," he said. "It's just more of an activity."

In the end, horseshoes, like all intramural activities, will give students an opportunity to get out of the house.

"It's something where we get to get out and enjoy the weather," Rundell said. "It's something else to do besides take a nap."

College basketball | Syracuse wins title
The Syracuse Orangemen juked, jammed and barely held on for a victory that gave coach Jim Boeheim his long-awaited championship.

Freshmen Carmelo Anthony and Gerry McNamara did the scoring and Hakim Warrick came up with a huge block at the end Monday night to lift the Orange to a thrilling 81-78 victory over Kansas.

Kirk Hinrich, cold all night, shot an airball at the buzzer and the Orangemen (30-5) ran to the floor to celebrate their first-ever title. Boeheim threw his arms in the air and ran to shake hands with Roy Williams, deprived once again of the championship.

Kick returner Chad Morton was awarded to the Washington Redskins on Monday by an arbitrator who ruled that the New York Jets failed to meet all terms of an offer sheet.

"The New York Jets do not have a binding agreement," arbitrator Richard I. Bloch wrote in his decision.

Morton becomes the fourth Jets player to move from New York to Washington this offseason, joining receiver Laveranues Coles, guard Randy Thomas and kicker John Hall.

The Florida Panthers are enjoying a rare winning streak. For the second straight year they finished first in the NHL draft lottery.

The Panthers, who would have picked fourth based on their regular-season record, should've had just a 10.7 percent chance of coming away with the top pick in Monday's lottery.

College basketball | Pitt looking for coach
Wake Forest coach Skip Prosser, a Pittsburgh native, looks to be atop Pitt's wish list for its new basketball coach.

Neither Pittsburgh interim athletic director Marc Boehm nor chancellor Mark Nordenberg would comment publicly on candidates. However, both were at the NCAA Final Four in New Orleans over the weekend as Pitt seeks a replacement for Ben Howland, who left last week to coach UCLA.

Prosser, who has taken three schools to the NCAA Tournament, also said he doesn't comment on other jobs. But, asked about Pittsburgh, he said, "It's my hometown. I have a lifelong love affair with the city of Pittsburgh. It's home."

NBA | Pistons' Wallace out for 2 weeks

Ben Wallace could miss the start of the playoffs for the Detroit Pistons with a left knee injury.

Wallace is expected to be sidelined for two weeks after an MRI exam Monday showed he has a sprained medial collateral ligament.

Wallace was injured Sunday against San Antonio, when teammate Tayshaun Prince fell backward into him on defense. Wallace went down and had to be helped off the court.

Robert Parish and James Worthy became teammates, elected together to the Basketball Hall of Fame on Monday.

Also chosen for the basketball shrine were Meadowlark Lemon of the Harlem Globetrotters, NBA pioneer Earl Lloyd, longtime Louisiana Tech women's coach Leon Barmore, Italian player Dino Meneghin and the late Chick Hearn, who broadcast 3,338 consecutive Laker games.

The seven were selected from a record group of 30 finalists and will be inducted in early September in Springfield, Mass.

Chicago Bulls general manager Jerry Krause resigned Monday, citing health problems, after helping build the dominant NBA team of the 1990s and then struggling to rebuild.

With Krause as GM, the Bulls won six titles behind the play of Michael Jordan. But Chicago has bottomed out since Jordan left after the final championship in 1998.

At 27-50 through Monday, Chicago will finish with a losing record for the fifth straight season and miss the playoffs again.

MLB | Red Sox pick up Pedro's option

Pedro Martinez's $17.5 million option for 2004 was exercised by the Boston Red Sox on Monday, seven months before the team needed to make a decision.

Martinez, 31, is 0-0 with a 0.60 ERA this season after two stellar starts that were squandered by the bullpen. The three-time Cy Young Award winner is second in the AL with 14 strikeouts.

The team wasn't required to decide on the option until Nov. 5, and was expected to wait and see whether his arm problems recurred. But Martinez had lobbied for the Red Sox to guarantee the money early, and they agreed.

Annan: UN has vital role

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Laying claim to "an important role" for the United Nations in postwar Iraq, Secretary-General Kofi Annan on Monday stressed that only the world body can bring legitimacy to the work of rebuilding the nation.

Annan chose the day that President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair opened talks in Northern Ireland on postwar Iraq to introduce the Security Council to Rafaeuddin Ahmed, his new special adviser on post-conflict issues.

The Bush administration says the U.S.-led coalition fighting in Iraq take the lead in running and rebuilding Iraq while the European Union and Washington's closest ally, Britain, are pushing for greater U.N. involvement.

Those divisions remained after Annan's 90-minute meeting with ambassadors from the 15 nations on the council.

"I'm sure there's going to be a role for the United Nations and that's going to have to be further discussed and further defined," U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte said.

"We have said that people shouldn't be surprised if the coalition is going to take the lead in Iraq, given the fact that it's the coalition that has basically sacrificed its blood and treasure to achieve the outcome that now seems to be inevitable."

France's U.N. ambassador, Jean-Marc de La Sabliere, reiterated that his country thinks the United Nations should have a major role. He said France hopes the Security Council can unite on a central role for the United Nations after the war.

Diplomats said Russia made clear that any post-conflict involvement in Iraq by the United Nations must not legitimize the war.

The Bush administration attacked Iraq without the council's authorization following strong opposition from France, Russia, Germany and China, which believed that Iraq could be disarmed peacefully. The same division is emerging over plans for Iraq's reconstruction.

Pakistan's U.N. Ambassador Munir Akram said he believes Ahmed, a fellow Pakistani and former U.N. assistant secretary-general, will talk to council members to "find out if there is a convergent approach we can come out with in the Security Council on the future role of the U.N."

Fed makes emergency economy plan

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Confronting new fears of recession, the Federal Reserve is refining an emergency economic rescue plan that includes further interest rate cuts and billions of dollars in extra cash for the banking system.

The Fed's effort would be aimed at pulling the country out of a nosedive that has seen 465,000 jobs evaporate in just the past two months, raising fears among economists that the weak recovery from the 2001 recession is in danger of stalling out altogether.

"Clearly, the Fed is in uncharted territory," said economist David Jones. "I think they will try some experimental moves."

One key element hasn't been used successfully in a half-century.

Based on comments by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and other Fed officials, the central bank is expected to move beyond its traditional buying and selling of short-term Treasury securities held by banks to the direct purchase of longer-term securities in an effort to influence long-term interest rates.

Also, Fed officials have indicated they are prepared in the event of an unexpected shock to the system to lend massive amounts of money directly to commercial banks to make sure that financial markets do not freeze up.

And as a third policy option, Fed officials have indicated they would explicitly state that if the federal funds rate is moved below its current 41-year low of 1.25 percent, it is likely to stay at the lower level as long as needed to get the economy on its feet — which would help investors' worries about a sudden jump in interest rates down the road.

The fact that Fed officials have been so open in discussing these options underscores the need the central bank sees to restore investor confidence that has been shaken by the fact that the Fed's aggressive two-year campaign to cut short-term rates has yet to produce a sustainable economic recovery.

The Fed's target for the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge for overnight loans, is now at a 41-year low of 1.25 percent.

"END OF RACISM"

His ability to laugh at the irony of racial barriers, as he makes you think about how we can change, is unique unto itself. "End of Racism" speaks the truth about the need to develop non-conformist dialogue and attitudes against racial bias across all races. Moss humorously delivers the message that the end of racism is an all-inclusive activity not based on our skin colors, but our humanity. A gifted lecturer and comedian, Moss takes serious topics and makes them "universally understandable" to the masses. While he speaks to your intellect, he has the rare ability to speak to your soul.

SADDAM | Officials assess damage after attack

nightfall, as units did over the weekend, members of the 2nd Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division hunkered down for the night at the sprawling, splendorous New Presidential Palace where Saddam once slept.

Several miles away, two soldiers and two journalists were killed in a rocket attack on the 3rd Infantry Division south of Baghdad, the U.S. Central Command reported. Another 15 soldiers were injured in the attack on an infantry position south of the city.

On the other side of town, Marines encountered tough fighting as they entered Baghdad for the first time, coming under machine gun fire. Lt. Col. B.P. McCoy said two Marines were killed and two were injured after an artillery shell hit their armored personnel carrier.

Marines crossed into Baghdad from the east, their engineers deploying a temporary pontoon bridge over a canal at the southern edge of the city after Iraqis rendered the permanent structure unsafe for heavy, armored vehicles.

Hours later, the sound of occasional American artillery split the night air.

The regime, its brutal hold on a country of 24 million slipping away, denied all of it. "There is no presence of American infidels in the city of Baghdad, at all," insisted Iraqi Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf.

The Iraqi government maintained its hold over state-run television and radio — arguably its most important remaining levers of control over the country — and broadcast emotional appeals to resist U.S. forces. Also shown were images of Saddam meeting with key advisers.

The American military flexed its muscle in downtown Baghdad while British officials said one of the regime's most brutal leaders, Ali Hassan al-Majid, had apparently been killed in a weekend airstrike in the southern city of Basra.

A cousin of Saddam, al-Majid was dubbed "Chemical Ali" for ordering a poison gas attack that killed thousands of Kurds in 1988.

Defense officials also said testing was under way on samples taken from a site where soldiers found metal drums possibly containing nerve gas or another type of chemical weapon. A local commander said it was possible the substance was a pesticide, since it was found at an agricultural site near Hindiyah.

After a two-week siege, British forces claimed control over Basra, a city of 1.3 million. Hundreds of civilians, women in chadors and barefoot children among them, poured into the street to welcome the invaders. Some handed pink carnations to the British troops in appreciation.

American and British troops advanced in Iraq as their political leaders were meeting in Belfast, Northern Ireland. For President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair, it was the second summit since the fighting began.

"The hostilities phase is coming to a conclusion," Secretary of State Colin Powell told reporters. Without elaboration, he said the U.S. government is sending a team this week to Iraq to begin laying the groundwork for an interim authority.

In the war zone, Americans felt confident enough for Gen. Tommy Franks, overall commander of Operation Iraqi Freedom, to visit troops in Najaf and elsewhere. The four-star general wore camouflaged body armor and a black beret as his Black Hawk helicopter carried him on his tour.

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said all but "a couple of dozen" of the Iraqi military's tanks had been destroyed in less than three weeks of combat.

Senior officials at the Pentagon said the Army assault into Baghdad was part of an attempt to persuade Iraqi forces that further resistance was futile. The military would like to avoid an all-out urban battle in Baghdad, with its 5 million inhabitants.

"We can basically go wherever we want, whenever we want, even if Saddam is still alive," said Perkins, who commanded the Army troops inside the city.

Missiles screamed overhead inside the city as more than 70 Army tanks, more than 60 Bradley fighting vehicles and an estimated 3,000 troops pushed their way into the heart of Baghdad.

Iraqi snipers fired on soldiers from rooms in the al-Rashid hotel, and tanks returned fire with their main guns and .50-caliber machine guns.

Across the river from the New Presidential Palace, Iraqis took up positions around the University of Baghdad, firing heavy machine guns across the 400-yard width of the Tigris River. Americans responded with mortar fire and close air support to rout the Iraqis.

— Chris Tomlinson reported from Baghdad; David Espo in Washington contributed to this report.

states to ratify the Constitutional amendment that repealed prohibition, doing so in 1948.

City Commissioner Brad Everett said he is unsure what actions the city would take if it had the power to allow Sunday liquor sales.

"I don't know if the city is at a point where we need Sunday liquor sales," he said.

"Maybe here in the next month we'll have to react to something, but we'll have to wait until then."

One possible advantage to Sunday sales, Everett said, would be additional revenue from liquor taxes.

But Debbie Miller, co-owner of D&D Liquor, said she doesn't foresee much opportunity for an increase of sales on Sunday.

Customers purchase alcohol on Saturday to prepare them for Sunday as well, she said, so lifting the ban would only shift that business from Saturdays to Sundays. The only real change, she said, would be that liquor store owners would have to labor and overhead costs to stay open an additional day.

"You just get used to having that day off," Miller said. "We probably would stay open if we could, but we're comfortable without it."

The only thing local governments can do right now, Everett said, is wait.

"There's no reason to do anything before we have all the facts," he said.

time.

"It's a real social atmosphere — not real quiet and formal," Drass said.

After dinner, Fanshler said he likes to watch "The Simpsons" at 6. The rest of his night consists of studying for a few hours and going to bed around midnight.

"We have dorms where everyone sleeps. I share my room with two other guys," he said. "The freshmen sleep in a room that holds about 20 guys. Once you get older, you get a bigger and better room."

"That entices you to live here longer because as you get older you can keep getting better rooms."

Drass, junior in marketing management, said he likes living in the house because there's always something to do.

"Whatever you want to do — whether you want to play basketball or something else — you can usually find someone in the house who will do it with you," he said. "You don't get bored very often."

Drass said he thinks living in residence halls would be very similar to living in a fraternity house in this aspect because students can meet a lot of people in each situation.

"But at fraternity houses, you're all friends. You get to interact in different ways so you get to know everyone really well. You're living with the same people for a couple of years. It's not like in the dorms where you have to meet new people all the time."

Sigs are not required to live in the house, Fanshler said, although most of them do until their senior year.

"You can move out whenever," he said. "When you move out, you have to pay the membership dues, though, so living in the house has that advantage."

Fanshler said another benefit of living in the house is that you can have an office position. He said he is in charge of the Sigs' philanthropy, Children's Miracle Network.

"During Derby Days, we try to get businesses to donate money to that organization," he said.

"I also help organize a weeklong series of events for the sororities. We'll have a karaoke contest, a dance competition and many other activities."

Although he has experienced many benefits in living in the fraternity house, Fanshler said he's ready to live on his own before graduating. He and Drass plan to rent an apartment with some other guys in the fall.

"We're moving out next year," Drass said. "We've run our course here."

"You kinda outgrow some of the stuff. You don't always want to party," he said. "And you've gotta make room for the younger guys."

MATTERS OF THE MIND

Experts explore power of the brain

By Rachel Krier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's the pinkish gray thing between the ears. Everyone has one, and everyone uses it. But very few know how the brain works.

"It's very similar to computers. Ninety-nine percent of us use a computer without knowing how it works. You can probably go through your life without knowing how it works," Stephen Kiefer, professor and department head of psychology, said. "But with the brain, the stakes are too high not to know how it works. If the brain breaks down, there is no buying a new one like a computer."

Kiefer said the brain is a very flexible organ in that it is tolerant to a degree. For instance, the brain can handle a certain amount of alcohol, but one can expect to suffer the consequences of brain damage from years of abuse.

Another potentially endangering example is a severe eating disorder, Kiefer said. He said that with anorexia, the brain will initially be very greedy with the few nutrients consumed because the brain is the body's number one priority. But with severe anorexia, the brain will start to shut down.

The brain is important because it controls everything, even the functions most people take for granted.

"It's amazing how it does so much processing, how fast and the amount it processes," Michele Moorman, senior in life sciences, said. "Our movements and behaviors are all controlled by the brain, the stuff people do every day but don't think about, like picking up a cup."

Keeley Bailey, senior in life sciences and student in Kiefer's class, said she has found it most interesting to learn about the complex relationships within the different areas of the brain.

"Balance and vision are closely related. You're constantly readjusting your balance by your vision without knowing it," Bailey said.

This relationship can be demonstrated by the exercise of standing on a stuffed pillow with closed eyes. Most people will not be able to keep their balance on the pillow.

Another close relationship within the brain takes place between the two hemispheres.

Despite the misconception that the right and left hemispheres are almost independent, the two halves work together more than apart.

"People think the hemispheres of the brain are out there doing their own thing, but that's not true," Kiefer said. "They are interacting all the time."

Although it's true that the left brain controls the majority of language functions and the right deals with spatial issues, it is incorrect to infer that a skilled public speaker is left brained," Kiefer said.

To better explain the relationship between the two hemispheres, think of the brain like a university, Kiefer said.

"A university has departments, offices and facilities that are different, but overlap," Kiefer said. "You wouldn't analyze the university by what's north and what's south of Mid Campus Drive."

Although Kiefer would like people to have an accurate understanding of their brains and how they control their bodies, he said, his main concern is that people use their brains.

"People have anxieties about how you can damage your brain, but nobody seems to be too concerned about the people who don't use it," Kiefer said. "People need to exercise their brains in an active way. That's why people are here. The educational process is designed to allow them to do that."

It's all in your head

Forebrain | The gray matter that covers the brain stem. It controls the more complex functions like communications and emotions. The forebrain allows you to recognize faces, interpret the inflections in people's voices and know social boundaries.

Brain stem | Similar in appearance to the stem of a flower, the brain stem makes up the interior portion of the brain system. It controls basic functions like breathing, swallowing and beating of the heart — the involuntary, unconscious actions that are vital to the body. Complexity in the brain increases in an upward pattern from the stem to the forebrain.

Cerebellum | Part of the brain stem that deals with spatial movement, coordination and balance. It allows you to touch your nose with your finger and walk in a straight line. These tasks are included in police sobriety tests because the cerebellum is one of the first parts of the body affected by alcohol consumption.

Spinal Cord | The long nervous system that travels down the back in the vertebral column controls reflexes. The most well-known is the knee-jerk reflex. A tap on the knee sends information to the spinal cord and the spinal cord replies by causing muscular contraction to make the knee jerk.

Radio station consultant posts 'Media War Manual' on Web site

Cleveland-based McVay Media Inc., a consultant to 150 radio stations across the country, has published a "Media War Manual" on its Web site.

Suggestions include playing the national anthem at a certain time each day.

With polls showing that about 70 percent of Americans support the war in Iraq, some media analysts see an inherent pressure to be positive about the war.

"2 Fast 2 Furious" actor upset over Diesel's withdrawal from sequel

Paul Walker said he was angry when Vin Diesel, his co-star in "The Fast and the Furious," pulled out of the sequel, "2 Fast 2 Furious."

"I thought we were partners. It hurt my feelings," Walker told Teen People magazine for its May issue.

"But once I stepped back, I realized that I couldn't take it personally — it's all about business."

Diesel chose not to do the sequel after a problem with contract negotiations.

TICKER | Columnist admits he has addiction to sports updates

The Internet has been lambasted by educators and authority figures for its questionable-at-best reliability come term paper time and its spawning of laziness ever since Al Gore dreamed it up back in the day.

On Sunday, I succumbed to the latter of those complaints completely.

My screen was split into five identical parts for much of the afternoon as I shrugged responsibility and pondered the outcome of four separate baseball games at once via the Internet's various sports tickers (one window was dedicated to NewsEdit, the Collegian's story entry start point).

I was at the end of my wits. I knew I was caught in addiction's clench, and time was running out to have something done by the Collegian's 4 p.m. content meeting. I was searching for fixes like Marquette Coach Tom Crean during the Golden Eagles' 94-61 loss to KU in the Final Four on Saturday.

See, my senioritis is already raging faster than Ruben Patterson's fists at a Portland Trail Blazers practice.

Add to that mix up-to-the-pitch baseball updates 86 the monotonous commentary, and my productivity has drooped to new depths.

Technology involved with mlb.com's version of the ticker even allows me to "hover" over the basepads to get the latest baserunning statistics available to man. Immediate comparisons between the teams can be scrutinized on kstatesports.com's ticker — and I'm supposed to put together a sports page during all of this?

I considered skipping the 4 p.m. meeting to stay on top of all the action, but I figured explaining the system to the paper's other editors would be hopeless. Sports seems to be synonymous with heroin to them, so I didn't bother.

Instead, I rigged a meager excuse for my tardiness that nobody bought and slouched in my desk like an embarrassed child.

Let's all learn together. Allow my laziness to be an example.

Sports is meant to be enjoyed after work, not during it. Denial does us no good and acceptance is the first step, so here goes.

My name is Dan, and I'm addicted to sports updates.

Dan is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at dansmith@k-state.edu.

Knight said. "Today, unfortunately, they kind of jumped up and got us. Hopefully they'll learn from it."

Although a day like Monday can take the life out of a team, Knight said the Cats need to bounce back in today's final 18 holes, which begin at 8 a.m.

"Tomorrow's a new day," she said. "We're a better team than that. There are some teams ahead of us, I'm sure, that aren't as good as we are. These things happen. It wasn't a good day for us."

"Tomorrow's about going out and playing some solid golf and hopefully getting a little confidence back," Knight said.

"We just have to hang in there and come back strong."

floor down so the men and women can have voluntary workouts," Thomas said.

The removable floor, consisting of 248 pieces of wood, each weighing 175 pounds, gives not only current Wildcats a chance to practice.

"We have several youth sports camps over the summer," Bramlage Coliseum Manager Jim Muller said. "We have cheerleader camps, wrestling camps and men's and women's basketball camps."

But sports camps put little strain on Bramlage because they typically are split with Ahearn Field House. Beyond maintenance and minor events, Thomas said the demand for Bramlage during summer months is minimal.

"Our student population drops pretty low," Thomas said. "We've never really had much of a demand for community events. There are a lot of activities in Manhattan in the summertime, and when the weather's good, most people want to stay outside."

A low student population also means a low demand for shows and concerts, Thomas said.

"Most of the show activity is concentrated around Sandstone near Kansas City," Thomas said. "They just do show after show in the summertime."

Even when maintenance is finished, camps close and Bramlage truly grinds to a halt, there is still work to be done.

"We're also responsible for maintenance of the baseball stadium, the football stadium and parking operations," Muller said.

Unlike Bramlage, its staff never gets an offseason.

"We just switch gears a little bit," Thomas said. "We'll lay new sod in the practice football field after spring practices are over, we'll start working at the football stadium towards the end of May, and by the time that is finished, we're back to getting Bramlage ready for sports in the fall."

October marks Bramlage's 15th anniversary. Built from 1986 to 1988 at a cost of $17.2 million, Bramlage has been host to musicians such as Garth Brooks and the Dave Matthews Band, and speakers the likes of Jimmy Carter and Jesse Jackson.

The past two seasons the "Purple Palace" has been host to the first two rounds of the Women's NCAA Basketball Tournament, in addition to Wildcat men's and women's basketball.

But those events generally take place during the school year, when Manhattan's population swells by 20,000 students. Summer offers Bramlage a brief reprieve.

"We're able to get a lot done," Thomas said.

Man cleared of rape

Attorney says coercion led to confession

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eddie Lowery was interrogated for hours before he broke down and confessed — to a crime he didn't commit.

In the summer of 1981, Lowery, a soldier at Fort Riley, was involved in a traffic accident in Ogden, Kan., on the same night a 74-year-old Ogden woman was raped.

Police suspected a connection and took Lowery into custody, where he was questioned for hours, given a lie detector test and finally, in tears, confessed. He was convicted by a jury in 1982 and was sentenced to 11 years to life in prison.

Now, 21 years later, he has been completely exonerated through DNA testing that was unavailable at the time of his trial.

"The biological evidence was discovered by a clerk of the court, Barry Clark, Lowery's attorney, said.

Clark, with the help of an attorney in New York City, sent the rape kit to a California lab, which proved Lowery's innocence. The Kansas Bureau of Investigation confirmed the results.

"One of the compelling aspects of this story is the clerks of the district court don't usually keep that stuff," Clark said. "That kind of evidence is held in the evidence room at the police department until it is authorized to be destroyed. The last entry in the court file directed police to keep that

Fort Riley soldier killed

Specialist dies in hostile fire incident

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A second Fort Riley soldier was killed in a hostile fire incident on April 5 in Iraq, the Defense Department confirmed Tuesday.

Spec. Larry Brown, 22, of Jackson, Miss., was assigned to the 3rd Brigade of the Army's 1st Armored Division.

Brown has been stationed at Fort Riley as an infantryman since April 20, 2001.

No memorial has been announced, Deputy Media Relations Officer Christie Vanover said.

Memorial services for Army Sgt. Jacob Butler, the first Fort Riley soldier killed in the war in Iraq, were set for today. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and other state dignitaries are expected to attend. The family requested the service be closed to the media and public.

Butler, a cavalry scout with the 3rd Brigade of the Army's 1st Armored Division, was killed at Assamawah, Iraq, when a rocket-propelled grenade hit his vehicle.

America At War

Forces seize Baghdad

Troops find ammunition

By Chris Tomlinson and David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.S. forces battled the tattered remnants of Iraq's army for control of downtown Baghdad on Tuesday, crushing a counterattack and seizing a military airport. Saddam Hussein's condition was unknown after an attempt to kill him from the air.

Inside the capital to stay, some Army units routed Iraqi fighters from a Republican Guard headquarters. Others discovered a 12-room complex inside a cave, complete with white marble floors, 10-foot ceilings and fluorescent lighting.

Marines battled snipers as they fought deeper into the capital from the east. They seized the Rasheed Airport and captured enough ammunition for an estimated 3,000 troops. They also took a prison where, ominously, they found U.S. Army uniforms and chemical weapons suits possibly belonging to American POWs.

On the city's northern side, Army forces set a Republican Guard barracks ablaze. Warplanes flew their bombing runs unchallenged, and smoke poured out of the Ministry of Planning building in the city's center.

"We are continuing to maintain our ability to conduct operations around and in Baghdad, and remove them from regime control," said Capt. Frank Thorp, a spokesman at U.S. Central Command.

State-run Iraqi television was knocked off the air, depriving the regime of a key source of influence over a population thought increasingly eager to help the forces of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Four days after Americans first penetrated the Baghdad outskirts, the city showed the effects of the war. Civilians roamed the streets with Kalashnikov rifles in hand, uncollected garbage piled up, and there were long lines at the reduced number of gasoline stations still open.

The toll on civilians from four days of urban combat was unknown. But the World Health Organization said Baghdad's hospitals were running out of supplies to treat the burns, shrapnel wounds and spinal injuries caused by the fighting.

There were military losses for the Americans amid the gains.

An A-10 "Warthog" warplane was shot down near Baghdad early in the day, and is believed to be the first fixed-wing aircraft downed by an Iraqi surface-to-air missile since the war began. U.S.

Pageant raises money for cancer research

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The only things missing were the swimsuits.

Members of the greek community gathered at McCain Auditorium to witness the first-ever K-State Housemother Pageant, which raised money for breast cancer research.

The competition — which included an interview, "Newlywed Game"-style quiz and evening gown competition — raised nearly $1,500 for the American Cancer Society, organizer Lance Stafford said.

Greek members sold 370 tickets for $4 each.

FarmHouse fraternity and Chi Omega sorority were co-hosts for the event. Stafford, senior in elementary education, said the idea originated when FarmHouse members were looking for a new philanthropy.

"It's one of those ideas that sounds funny, but then, once you think about it, starts sounding better," he said. "It's a chance to shed light on some ladies who are usually in the background."

Breast cancer research was decided upon as the beneficiary of the philanthropy, Stafford said, because a FarmHouse member's mother recently was diagnosed with and defeated the cancer.

Barb Alpers of Hudson, Kan., was diagnosed with breast cancer about two years ago, and after surgery and six months of chemotherapy, was declared cancer-free. Alpers was invited to help judge the pageant.

Eleven housemothers were scheduled to participate, but health concerns forced Melodie Pooler of Alpha Gamma Rho to withdraw.

Alpers and five other judges rated the housemothers. Hosts Chris Johns and Nicole Gilgus announced

Bobbie Lonker, housemother for Beta Theta Pi, was the overall winner in the K-State Housemother Pageant in McCain Auditorium.

Each housemother received an award, and Bobbie Lonker, housemother of Beta Theta Pi, was named the overall winner.

Stafford said the pageant served two purposes: to recognize the housemothers and to raise money for a worthy cause.

Alpers said the concern students showed for cancer patients is more important than the money.

"Even though you might not know anyone directly, praying can give someone that extra lift and make them feel blessed," she said.

BANTER AND BELLOW

Comic strips provide daily dose of humor, reflect foibles of life in interesting ways

LAYTON:

I firmly believe the comics people read in childhood have an undebatable influence on a person's long term sense of humor.

My brothers and I worshiped Gary Larson, who drew "The Far Side," an intelligent comic with subtle wit and twists of irony.

Only in "The Far Side" can bears go hunting for bear hunters, dressed as bear hunters themselves with guns and all.

I recollect different bits of his comics nearly every day. Yesterday, for example, I saw a friend of mine feed a pet piranha.

I was reminded of one particular comic in which two alligators had just feasted upon a couple of nudists.

Logically, all I could think of was the two reptiles' exchange as they basked on the beach, "mmm-mmm, soft and pink."

I have to admit, it made me feel like eating someone.

Hello Clarice...

I also thought of Bill Waterson's "Calvin and Hobbes" as a couple of my good friends.

Anyone who grew up without Calvin and Hobbes is probably not worth talking to. Ever. It's a fair rule of thumb.

Where else are kids exposed to thermodynamics at a young age?

Taking this a step in the opposite direction: those who grew up reading fluff like "Cathy" can bury their faces in a bag of rice cakes and cream cheese for the simple reason that all Cathy ever did was whine about herself.

I really didn't need to be exposed to the hell of being a washed-up, middle-aged, self-doubting whack job, especially when I was five.

You want to scare the bejeezus out of little kids? Make them read Cathy for a week.

DANA:

As a journalist by book and trade, I oughta be ashamed of myself.

The comics were my first reason to pick up the newspaper as a kid, and they still sorta are.

But I don't feel too bad. Among war headlines, fire damages and tuition hikes, comics definitely have their place in the newsprint world. Sometimes, it's important to have a good laugh.

Of course, "Calvin and Hobbes" was the greatest strip of all time.

Two of the funniest newer strips are "Zits" and "Foxytrot." They can really take you back to the high school days of braces-faces, name-calling and the mojo-producing magic of a little lip gloss.

Some of the best comics, though, don't merely cause chuckles and chortles. "Non Sequitur," for example, was created to make readers think about how ridiculous politics and other American institutions are. "Dilbert" is also a solid reminder of why I really don't want to be confined to a cubicle 40 useles hours per week.

Strips like "Funky Winkerbean" and "For Better or For Worse" combine daily foibles with serious life changes. I especially like these comics because the characters grow — they aren't static plastic like other pencil-drawn people.

Discussion with others reminded me of my least favorite strip: "Cathy." If people like this calorie-obsessed shopping fiend ever come face-to-face with me, I will scream in fear.

If you see Cathy's shirt with the heart on it (it's probably pink), run the other way.

Back in the day, I used to indulge in a little "Brenda Starr." I don't read it anymore, but it is pretty cool that she's a redheaded vixen with a hot journalism career and even steamier romances.

Maybe a little of Brenda's life will mix with mine. Except I'll pass on the disappearing boyfriend with the eye patch. That's just creepy.

Question: Are comics worthy of your time?

Renter's insurance offers students liability protection

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Renting an apartment or house can be expensive. Between the deposit and parking permit, students may have little money left for renter's insurance.

But saving money now could be costly in the future.

Josh Salmans, State Farm Insurance agent, said students should get renter's insurance for two main reasons — to protect their personal property and for liability protection.

"Most people come in to insure their personal property, but the biggest advantage is liability," he said. "Say you're burning a candle, left it unattended, and you're the reason a building burned down."

"The building's insurance may turn around and sue whoever is liable — the liability coverage will help pay for that damage."

Jim Feeney, American Family Insurance agent, said rates are based on amount of personal property, location of the dwelling and the deductible.

Feeney said most insurance companies require at least $10,000 in possessions to receive renter's insurance.

"Not all students have enough personal property that meets minimum requirements to have renter's insurance, but it depends on the circumstance," he said. "If they live with a roommate or significant other, there is a possibility of having two people on the policy where two people would equal that."

However, Feeney said many students may be covered without even knowing it.

"In most cases, if their parents have a homeowner's policy, that policy will extend to a student's personal property off the parents' premises," he said. "Our policy, and most other policies, cover that."

Feeney said students should check with their parents' insurance companies before seeking renter's insurance. Costs would be about $10 per month for $10,000 worth of coverage, he said.

Feeney said most insurance companies offer a multi-line discount. For example, people with auto insurance through the same company could receive 10 percent off of their renter's insurance.

And since many college students pay high auto insurance rates, the savings could almost pay for the cost of renter's insurance, Salmans said.

He said most renter's policies come with $100,000 in liability and a 5-percent discount with the presence of smoke detectors, deadbolt locks and fire extinguishers. He said students may also be covered if a visitor is injured while in their home or damage to other people's property.

Ben Kearns, property supervisor for McCullough Development, said about half of their renters have insurance.

"We do not require renter's insurance, but we highly encourage it," he said.

"If someone was to break into an apartment, if there was a fire or natural disaster, renter's insurance ensures that their goods are covered."

Christine Wilson, property manager at Chase Manhattan Apartments, said she also recommends getting insurance.

"It could protect you from that one in 10 chance that you didn't think would happen," she said.

Comedian examines society with character sketches

By Tristan Hinderliter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Poverty, hatred and bias are the real "weapons of mass destruction," said comedian and social commentator Preacher Moss in a lecture Tuesday evening in Forum Hall.

Moss is a writer for Damon Wayans, "Saturday Night Live," "Politically Incorrect," BET's "Comicview" and the "George Lopez Show," among others. He stopped in Manhattan on his "End of Racism" comedy and lecture tour.

The lecture was a social commentary, and at times resembled a sketch or a play as Moss examined the realities of living through different characters.

He stepped into the shoes of a Jamaican policeman, a Chinese crack dealer, a young Afghan boy, a bankrupt knight of the Ku Klux Klan and an old woman with no vocal cords as well as many others.

Moss said he was interested in reality, relevance and truthful dialogue. His presentation was peppered with anecdotes.

"I hate to see anybody die," Moss said. "We have this War on Terrorism, which I can understand, but there's always that aspect."

"Being an African-American, I'd say that as minorities we can take credit for a lot of things, but if you're black, Latino, Asian, woman or poor — you never take credit for starting a war."

He said that in the United States, the government picks a war like he would pick a street fight — "Y'all gonna make sure that there's no doubt left of the outcome," he said.

Matt Elliott | COLLEGIAN

Preacher Moss speaks about attitudes, as well as racial bias and its effects, during a lecture in Forum Hall.

"We went over to Afghanistan, and we bombed those people for a couple weeks. Then we dropped sandwiches on them from 35,000 feet," he said.

Moss said "diversity" is a catchphrase at the moment because minority populations are relevant now.

His message was of unity across all races and religions.

At the end, he told people to hold up their hands in front of them and look at their fingers, and remember there's five letters in "white," five letters in "black" and five letters in "unity."

Erica Smith, Union Program Council multicultural co-chair, said this is End Discrimination Week, which is being observed at universities across the nation.

She said she saw Moss at a conference in Tulsa and thought he was a great speaker, so she wanted to try to bring him to K-State to speak.

Daniel Berges, freshman in biological and agricultural engineering, said the lecture was very entertaining.

"I liked it a lot — it was aimed at college kids," he said. "I felt like he personalized it for 20-year-olds."

"You could connect with him easily, and he was easy to follow."

Moss said he likes sharing his thoughts and ideas at universities.

"All I can do is share my intent with people who are here," he said. "You want to stimulate thought into tangible information — that's what this is supposed to be about."

TO THE POINT Overturned case should serve as future example

The recent case of Eddie Lowery, who was convicted in Riley County of a rape he didn't commit, should be an example to law enforcement officials.

Lowery was recently exonerated through DNA testing 21 years after his 1982 conviction. Although the technology to test this physical evidence became available, another type of important evidence in this case is missing: a recording of the interrogation.

Lowery had confessed to the rape, and his lawyer, Barry Clark, said police coercion led to a forced confession.

Yet, there is no proof of how the Riley County Police Department's interrogation proceeded, because it was not recorded on tape.

The department does not require that interrogations be recorded, but it should.

Taping these procedures would eliminate the potential for conflicts about what happened because the conversations would be on permanent record. It would help the police department know whether officers are following regulations.

The simple and low-cost procedure of taping interactions between the police and suspects is one that could change lives.

Memo to the baseball team: win a game.

What does it mean when a guy tells you he can't be with you because you are too much fun?

Always remember that two rights don't make a wrong. But always remember that three rights make a left.

Women, why do you work for years to change a guy's habits, but then complain he's not the guy you first met?

I once went six months without talking to my girlfriend. I didn't want to interrupt her.

Current letter-based grading system flawed

I am a 4.0 student, and I don't think I should be.

Don't get me wrong. I try to work hard, and I do my best to accomplish the objectives set forth in my classes. But I have hardly ever achieved an A that didn't have a minus behind it. In fact, I've earned maybe half a dozen full A grades in my college career.

More often, I'm borderline. I dance between B+ and A-, and I always end up doing a diving lunge during finals week in a desperate attempt to land in the end zone of the A's.

Why doesn't my grade point average reflect my not-quite-perfect work? Because the four-point grade system is flawed.

Actually, that's not quite true. It works well in theory. Faculty members simply have to grade students' work, and then they can record the appropriate number of points for the semester: 90 percent and above is a four, 80-89 percent is a three and so forth. It's all very neat on paper, and it can be useful in objective courses.

But what if a student in literature or the social sciences consistently does borderline work? What if "A-/B+" is literally the most common grade marked on the student's painstakingly crafted essays?

And what if a chemistry student gets an 89 percent average in the course? What about an 88.9?

The difference between A- and

MICAH HAWKINSON

B+ is enormous. The difference between B- and C+ is even bigger. The temptation to round grades up can be huge — especially when the grade is subjective in the first place.

And, believe it or not, teachers do worry about these things. They don't want to ruin your life just because you turned in an essay that didn't sparkle.

K-State should adopt a grading system that would make it easier for teachers to give the grades that students earn. A plus/minus system would accomplish this, and it would raise the university's standard of student evaluation.

Under a plus/minus grading system, not just any putz (me, for example) would be able to earn a 4.0. It would take a truly superior effort, and only those who definitely earned the full grade of A would receive it.

Conversely, teachers could reward students whose work is above average, but not quite good enough to bump them up a letter grade.

Changing to plus/minus would give teachers flexibility and a more reliable system of assessing their students. In addition, it would benefit students who perform more work than others who, under the present system, receive the same grade.

One of my friends is fond of saying that Bis the best grade of all. Under the four-point system, it is. The difference in effort required to earn a B- as opposed to an A- is minuscule, whereas a B- is only slightly harder to get than a C+ is. The system often allows students to get deceptively good grades — or deceptively bad ones.

Overall, a plus/minus system would be highly beneficial for the university.

The Faculty Senate apparently sees the value of considering a plus/minus system. In the Sept. 3, 2002, Academic Affairs meeting, members of the Senate discussed the possibility of a plus/minus grading scale.

The meeting's minutes mention that students previously had expressed an interest in a plus/minus grading system, but without a minus component.

Ironically, implementing a plus grade system could harm student grades more than a plus/minus system.

If, for instance, I did work that didn't deserve a full A, a mere plus system could make it more likely for a teacher to give me a B+ than a plus/minus system would.

A plus/minus system is the best choice for K-State. It would give teachers more power, it would better represent students' academic achievements, and it would punish slackers while rewarding diligence.

I know that under a plus/minus system, I'd have a lower GPA. But I would sure feel a lot prouder about the few A's I had.

Judgmental sports fans take credit for wins, express anger

Students, alumni and faculty cover themselves in purple from head to toe and march in droves to support K-State athletics. In Manhattan, sports are a religion.

They are a welcome reprieve from the everyday monotony of life. Having an interest in sports and a love for the game is a healthy habit. Standing proudly among thousands of K-State fans in Memorial Stadium on a crisp fall day is a cherished pastime.

People who enjoy sports take their interest to different degrees. There are those who will tune in to a few basketball games per year and keep up with one or two K-State football games. Then there are the fans who watch their team religiously. They will travel to see their team play, and they know every player. These enthusiasts love the game and support their teams through good times and bad. Then there are those who take sports too seriously and become unrelenting, judgmental commentators.

They stand proudly screaming in the bleachers at coaches, referees, players and fans from the opposing team.

They spend hours critiquing games and discussing what could have been done to improve each play. Grown men will cry when their team loses an important game and become angry when a mistake is made on the playing field.

These zealots take it personally when a player from "their" team makes a mistake or scores a goal. If their team wins, they will bask in the glory of victory and strut around as if they scored the winning touchdown themselves.

When their team loses, they are thrown into a fit of passion and often berate the players for mistakes made and express disgust for their team's performance.

An example of a passionate display of anger regarding athletics was demonstrated recently in the Democratic Republic of Congo, according to www.rediff.com. On April 6, seven people were declared dead and 51 were seriously injured during a local soccer derby match. The two teams, Mazembe and Lupopo, were the southern city's two biggest teams. The mayhem started when people began throwing things at the players. Police tried to protect the players by using tear gas on the out-of-control spectators, and a stampede ensued.

K-State fans may not literally throw things at their sports players, but they do throw insults. After Pervis Pasco's fateful traveling incident in the final seconds of the first round of the Big 12 Tournament, the Campus Fourum reflected the disgust of the student body. Comments such as, "Hey Pervis, did you travel anywhere for vacation?" were directed toward the senior center.

Pasco did, by all accounts, lose the game for K-State. But what about all of the games he contributed to that were victories? Human beings make mistakes, no matter how high of a pedestal we choose to put them on.

People were angry because Pasco "represents" our school. This is true. What he did was embarrassing. However, the speed with which K-State fans turned their backs on Pasco was disheartening.

People sitting on the couch or yelling from the bleachers are quick to judge players who carry a heavy load balancing school and athletics.

Our athletes work hard to represent our school, and the screaming fans who show up for the games to have a good time.

Pasco's fellow teammates have the right to criticize him and blame their loss on his one mistake. But fans who ate a pizza and drank a few beers before the game have no right to be so insanely angry at a basketball player who does more than just talk about sports — he plays.

Blue ribbons distributed for child abuse awareness, prevention month

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Blue is the color of bruises — children's bruises that have been incurred by abuse.

In 1989, Bonnie Finney of Virginia tied a blue ribbon to the antenna of her van to display her intention to never forget the battered, bruised bodies of her grandchildren, according to material from the Court Appointed Special Advocate campaign.

Blue served as a constant reminder to her to fight for the protection of children.

The Sunflower CASA Project of Riley County is distributing blue ribbons to businesses throughout the community as a part of Child Abuse Prevention and Awareness month.

CASA has displays outside Sears, the Manhattan Public Library and Blockbuster Video. The displays have blue ribbons for residents to pick up, as well as information regarding the organization.

"I think a lot of people don't want to realize how Candlelight ceremony

CASA will organize a "Light of Hope" candlelight ceremony on April 29. The ceremony will light a candle for each of the children abused in Riley County. It will begin at 5:45 p.m. at the First United Methodist Church's activity center.

many people in Riley county are abused," Jennifer Anguiano, CASA advocate supervisor, said. "By distributing the blue ribbons, it gets the word out that child abuse and neglect does happen here and it happens in every city and every state."

In 2002, the courts declared that 130 children in Riley County were in need of a CASA, and 25 new cases have been appointed this year, said Amy Horgan, CASA intern.

"We're the child's voice in court," said Horgan, senior in family studies and human services.

"It gets kind of heart-wrenching sometimes, because some of the things the children have been through breaks your heart, and you want to take them all home with you."

CASA volunteers have to go through training which involves 30 hours over the course of 10 weeks. Riley County's CASA organization has 65 volunteers, but is asking for more, Horgan said.

"We submit a report to the judge with our recommendations involving the child," she said.

"The CASA report is an important piece in the court because we have the most interaction with the child."

She said social workers and attorneys often can't see the child as much as CASA volunteers.

Although it is stressful at times, she said the kids keep her involved in CASA and believing in what she is doing.

"I want to make sure they have a good environment to grow up in. The kids keep me going even if something doesn't go right in the court system. They keep me wanting to do more to get them in a good living environment," Horgan said.

LOWERY | Man exonerated of rape after 21 years

evidence."

Lowery served 10 years in the Lansing State Penitentiary.

"Here's a 22-year-old kid, never been in trouble in his life, in the walls of Lansing prison with the worst of the worst," Clark said.

After being released on parole, Lowery had to register as a sex offender. He now works for Ford Motor Company in Kansas City, Mo., and lives with his wife and children.

There have now been 128 DNA exonerations in the U.S. since the technology has been developed. Kansas started using the testing in 1986, Clark said.

"False confessions happen a lot more frequently than we think," he said. "In this case, we believe Mr. Lowery's false confession was entirely attributable to police coercion. The detectives who entered his confession claimed Mr. Lowery knew details that only the perpetrator would know. They claimed Mr. Lowery volunteered that information."

"In fact, the police told him the details of the crime. That's insidious," Clark said.

In order to prevent false confessions, Clark said all interrogation sessions should be videotaped.

"The very best thing we can do to prevent false confessions and prevent police coercion is to videotape police interviews. If the police want to interview a suspect, turn on a videotape, and then we will know if it is coerced."

The Riley County Police Department does not require taped interrogations.

"When a detective brings a person in, the vast majority of the time, we tape the person," Lt. Jay Mills said. "It's up to the detective. Most of them, by habit, will videotape. If an officer is out in the field, he doesn't have that luxury."

The RCPD does not condone coercion, Mills said, but it can use aggressive interrogation techniques.

"A lot of people don't think a police officer can lie to them," he said. "We can lie to get a confession. We can throw down a set of fingerprints and say they are yours. You can use trickery, you just can't coerce."

Mills said that although they use certain tactics, detectives respect the person in custody no matter what they suspect them of doing.

"We can't deny them use of a bathroom. If they are thirsty, we give them a drink," he said. "I am not saying we don't get loud and accuse people. Our job is to make sure the story they are telling is correct. We don't use violence or the threat of violence, and we don't make promises we can't keep."

When people are in custody, they are given their Miranda rights, but if they continue talking after requesting a lawyer, it is admissible in court, Mills said.

But for Lowery, reforms to the interrogation process are of no assistance. Clark said he and Lowery are considering a civil claim for compensation for Lowery's imprisonment.

"We can't give the years of his life back," Clark said.

Cats should hate KU

Rivalry makes school fun

JOEL REICHENBERGER

Whew!
That was close.
Despite sickening feelings that the contrary was inevitable, Monday turned out to be a pretty good day.

I figured it would be a long day, and hoping to have a prime seat to drown out the sorrows, my orange-clad clan and I headed for our favorite establishment early. We found a seat with a clear shot at the TV and braced for the worst.

As soon as the game began, though, we were shocked, and not only by the schooling Syracuse's Gerry McNamara gave Kirk Hinrich.

The bar, which prides itself on its purple tradition, was filled with Jayhawk supporters.

There we sat, surrounded by a barrier of temporary Jayhawks. Beyond them were four walls covered with K-State memorabilia. At one point, our waitress joked that people were complaining and that we need to stop cheering so loud for the "other" team.

Meanwhile, five feet in front of me, a picture hung of a by-gone Willie the Wildcat torching a Jayhawk flag.

So what if the Hawks hail from the Cats' home state or even the same conference? Duke and North Carolina are only a few miles apart, but I'll bet no one found a Tar Heel cheering on the Blue Devils during their National Championship run two years ago.

Do you think any Sooners shed a tear when Syracuse up-ended Texas in the Final Four?

The current state of K-State's basketball team and KU's football team has led to the cooling of a once fiery rivalry.

It was never clearer than on Monday. Most people don't take it seriously anymore. But some of us still do. Even if KU isn't anyone else's rival, it is mine.

What's so bad about a rivalry, anyway? My friends and I sat among 25 fans cheering for KU on Monday night. We were loud, obnoxious and probably responsible for a few bruised egos. But we had a great time.

We spent the night trading playful blows, but no one on either side was really angry. In the end, we had only met more people and made more friends.

I don't hate the people at KU. One of my best friends is about to get a degree there (I know it won't be worth its weight in toilet paper, but don't tell him that). Everyone here knows some people going to school there. But that doesn't mean they can't be our rivals.

Rivalries are fun. I had a blast participating in a small one on Monday night, and I think the people lucky enough to be seated around us did as well.

Of course it's always a drag getting heckled when your team loses, but the way all the cell phones in Lawrence seemed to turn off at 11 Monday night — that's priceless.

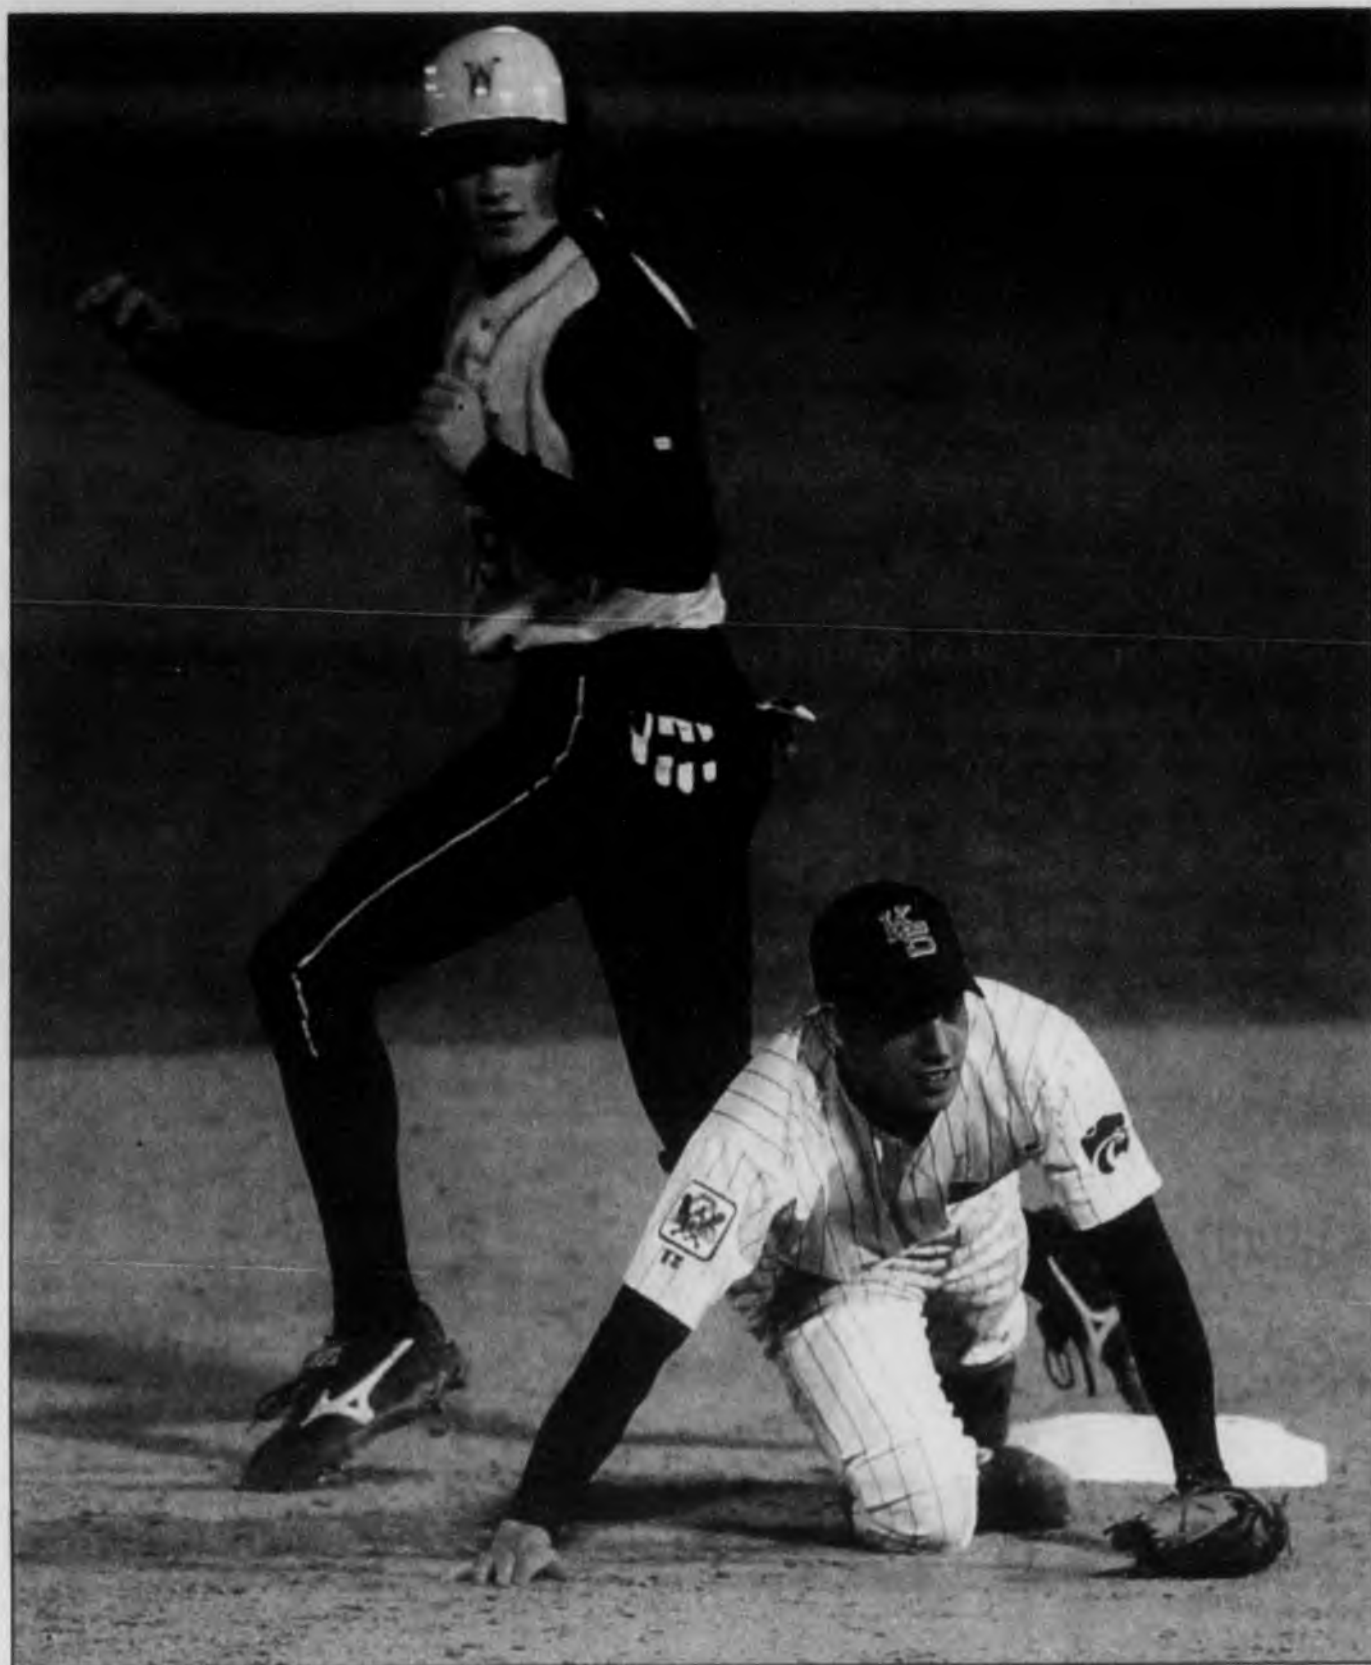

The pictures covering the walls showed that there is too much tradition between the two schools to let something that can be so much fun waste away in the world of political correctness and mushy feelings.

Hate KU. It's more fun that way.

Now, if only we could find a way to get the evil Jayhawk mastermind to return to his North Carolina roots. Then we'd have 'em right where we wanted 'em.

STRUGGLING FOR A WIN

K-State's Marc Chabot tries to keep his foot on the bag as Wichita State's Phil Napolitan looks for a call during their game March 26 at Frank Meyers Field. The two teams will meet for the second time this season when the Wildcats visit the Shockers tonight.

Photos by Zach Long | COLLEGIAN

K-State travels to Wichita State tonight

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first meeting between K-State and Wichita State wasn't a pitchers' duel by any stretch of the imagination.

The Wildcats and Shockers combined for 24 runs as Wichita State beat the Cats 14-10 at Frank Meyers Field at Tointon Family Stadium on March 26.

That loss marked the Wildcats' fifth straight after a conference-series sweep at the hands of Nebraska and another setback against the Creighton Bluejays. The Shockers have since moved to 22-11 on the year.

K-State, on the other hand, has lost six in a row since facing Wichita State and is one loss away from tying the longest losing streak in the Mike Clark era and three losses away from matching the longest losing streak in school history.

The Wildcats will travel to Eck

Stadium tonight for a 7 p.m. rematch with the Shockers. Wichita State likely will be ready and eager to hand K-State consecutive loss number 12.

Clark said his team will be sporting some changes against the Shockers tonight, most notably within the pitching staff.

"We're re-evaluating everything," he said. "We're trying to see what we're doing wrong and what we're doing right. We're definitely going to look at other people differently to see about roles changing some."

"We have to. In a lot of cases, we're pitching our way out of games too early. The pitchers aren't happy with the way they're throwing. They're disappointed, and they know they can do better. It's about what we have to do to get them back in the zone."

K-State has been surrendering big leads early of late.

In last weekend's three-game set against Oklahoma State, the Wildcats gave up seven runs in the first three innings of the series opener. In game two, K-State pitching surrendered seven in the first four innings of work.

On Sunday, K-State starter Kevin Melcher was torched for six runs in the first.

But K-State didn't give up an early lead to Wichita State in the teams' first meeting. The Wildcats actually led 4-3 going into the sixth before Shocker second baseman Phil Napolitan put WSU up to stay with a grand slam off reliever Jonathan Gutierrez.

Pitching coach Mike Hensley said the changes K-State will make on the mound, while dramatic, are geared toward correcting mistakes like the one Gutierrez made in the first contest against WSU.

Wildcats' losing streak weighing heavily on players' minds

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Compare the somber mood inside K-State's clubhouse Tuesday with the sense of optimism that surrounded Coach Mike Clark's program prior to the season and a few words come to mind.

Disappointment. Embarrassment. Frustration.

It's written on the face of nearly every coach and player now — a reminder of the Cats' current 11-game losing streak.

"People come here now with a losing streak, and there's not as many smiles on faces, and heads hang a little bit," pitcher Jared Brite said.

Brite gets the start tonight against Wichita State in K-State's latest bid to turn things around. He had better be ready, too. Against Wichita State, things could unfold quickly.

Last time Clark's club saw the Shockers — a 14-10 WSU win on March 26 at Tointon Family Stadium — the teams combined for 24 runs on 28 hits, including three home runs.

If a similar scenario plays out tonight, the Cats could be in trouble. K-State Wichita State's Phil Napolitan rounds the bases after hitting a grand slam against K-State on March 26 at Frank Meyers Field. Napolitan was huge in the Shockers' 14-10 win the last time the teams met, with four hits and four RBI. The Wildcats will look to break an 11-game losing streak when they take on Wichita State tonight at Eck Stadium in Wichita.

pitchers have allowed 117 runs during the streak, while the Cats have managed only 52.

"When you go through adversity like this, once the slightest hint of something goes wrong, the snowball effect takes place," pitching coach Mike

Hensley said. "That's what we're fighting against right now."

They're fighting against time, too. With more than half the season already in the books, a return trip to the Big 12 Tournament seems unlikely.

"We don't talk about it much, but we know we don't have much left," outfielder Pat Maloney said. "We've got to battle each game one at a time, and then we'll get it."

Nevertheless, the team's long-term goals haven't changed. Preseason aspirations of an NCAA Regional appearance might seem like a long shot, but the Cats aren't giving up.

"I think it's still realistic," Maloney said. "We can go out and play well and start a different streak the other way."

That means a different storyline for tonight's contest.

While the Cats' rivalries always seem to raise both team's competitive spirit, K-State's drive tonight is more basic.

"Just winning right now is what we're striving for," Maloney said, "no matter who it is against."

College basketball | U Conn wins title

After winning the national championship last year, Connecticut lost its four senior starters but still had the one player it needed — Diana Taurasi.

The fearless junior with the flashy moves proved that UConn's women could rebuild and still repeat.

Taurasi ignored a sore back and ankle and carried the Huskies to a 73-68 victory over Tennessee on Tuesday night for their second straight national championship.

She always seems to be at her best against Tennessee, and she scored 28 points this time, displaying the poise and passion that made her the national player of the year and the Final Four's most outstanding player.

"She's cut from a different cloth. She's got a lot of Italian in her. God bless her," said UConn coach Geno Auriemma, himself the son of Italian immigrants.

MLB | Angels official quits after selling ring

A computer programmer for the Anaheim Angels who solicited bids for his World Series championship ring on eBay has resigned, a team spokesman said.

Phil Alger, 39, was suspended last week pending an investigation into whether he violated company policy by releasing confidential information in his auction listing. His computer passwords were blocked and his company equipment seized. Alger said he resigned soon after, fearing that he would be fired.

The Angels gave players rings appraised at $15,000 each and gave hundreds of employees rings worth about $10,000 each, team vice president Tim Mead said.

MLB | Strawberry finished doing time

Darryl Strawberry, an eight-time Major League Baseball All-Star, was released from Gainesville Correctional Institution after serving 11 months of an 18-month prison sentence for violating probation on cocaine possession charges.

After saying "Thank you" to a guard, he and his wife got into a silver Lincoln Navigator, which was driven by another man, and drove off, getting only about a half-mile away before they had to turn back — Strawberry had forgotten his personal belongings. A guard handed him a plastic bag and he was off again.

Strawberry also accepted the $100 check the state gives inmates upon their release, but declined a suit of clothes, prison officials said. Strawberry refused to talk to reporters.

NHL | Gilmour out for Leafs' 1st round

Doug Gilmour's knee injury has not healed enough for him to be in the Toronto Maple Leafs' lineup until the second round of the playoffs, if at all.

Any hope that the 39-year-old center might rejoin the Leafs late in their opening-round series against the Philadelphia Flyers was dashed after an MRI on his left knee. He has medial collateral and anterior cruciate ligament damage.

Gilmour expects to have another MRI in the next two weeks.

NBA | 'The Answer' not worth lawsuit

A judge dismissed a lawsuit by a man who contended he gave Allen Iverson the nickname "The Answer" and sought royalties for its use on merchandise.

Jamil Blackmon said the Philadelphia 76ers' star had reneged on a promise that Blackmon would receive 25 percent of the proceeds from use of "The Answer."

The nickname adorns a popular line of Reebok basketball shoes and is incorporated into other products.

Golf | Burk criticizes judge's decision

Martha Burk criticized a judge who barred her group from protesting at the Augusta National. Burk, who wants Augusta National Golf Club to admit its first female member, plans to appeal two separate rulings.

WNBA | Stern gives players ultimatum

NBA commissioner David Stern told WNBA players Tuesday that unless they settle their contract dispute by April 18, the 2003 season for the women's league will not be played.

The union is demanding substantial pay increases and free agency, among other things.

Central Command said the pilot ejected safely, was recovered by ground forces and was in good condition.

A U.S. F-15E jet fighter and its two-man crew also have been missing since Sunday, the military announced Tuesday. It was not known what happened to the plane.

Postwar government was a topic for a summit meeting that brought President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair to Northern Ireland. Both men talked of a U.N. role inside Iraq once the fighting is over, and sought to minimize splits on who should govern and rebuild the country.

In the meantime, they trumpeted the battlefield successes, and said Saddam's days were numbered.

"I don't know whether he survived" a bombing attack on Monday, Bush said of the Iraqi leader. "The only thing I know is that he's losing power."

Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations said he believed Saddam had escaped the bombing of a site where he and at least one son were believed to have been meeting on Monday. There was no direct evidence either way, though.

The site remained in Iraqi hands, although Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks said American troops hoped to get there soon.

Officials ordered the attack after getting intelligence that Saddam was at the facility. Officials said four bunker-busting bombs were dropped by a single B-1B bomber, which was diverted in flight from its original target. McChrystal said only 45 minutes elapsed between the time the intelligence reached military officials and when the bombs fell.

"I was never prouder to be in the Air Force," said Lt. Col. Fred Swan, the bombardier aboard the warplane that carried out the mission.

Separately, the Arab television network al-Jazeera reported that a U.S. warplane attacked its office on the banks of the Tigris River, killing a reporter.

The Iraqi counterattack began shortly after dawn when an estimated 500 Iraqis jumped off trucks and buses, firing assault rifles and rocket-propelled grenades at Army forces holding a key intersection in the western part of the city.

Two A-10 warplanes were called in to provide air cover, strafing building tops and directing 30 mm rapid cannon fire against the Iraqis. "They're a beautiful thing," said Capt. Philip Wolford, a company commander with the 3rd Infantry Division, as the jets roared overhead.

He said at least 50 Iraqis were killed in the attack, and the rest routed. Two U.S. soldiers were reported wounded, one seriously, by snipers on nearby rooftops.

BASEBALL | Cats to face Shockers again tonight

"Obviously, the recipe, if you will, has not worked to this point," he said.

"We're going to make some changes. But all the exact changes we are going to make aren't on paper right now. We're going to make some changes from our last three weekends.

"In some aspects, this is going to seem drastic to the common fan," he said.

Part of K-State's new recipe against Wichita State will include a start by two-sport athlete Jared Brite.

Brite, a placekicker and punter for the Wildcat football team, will be making just his third start of the year when he takes the mound against the Shockers.

Shockers.

The redshirt sophomore has pitched eight innings, given up seven runs; five earned, walked ten, hit three and struck out eight.

Brite said he will take the mound in the interest of helping K-State earn and sustain a lead.

"We want to be the team to beat in Kansas," he said.

"To do that we have to beat Wichita State and Kansas. The last time we played the Shockers, we thought we had a good chance to beat them, and things just didn't turn out the way we wanted."

To keep a lead, K-State will need to cut down on some of the mistakes it made against the Shockers the first time around.

The Wildcats turned in four errors, walked five, and hit two batters in the first matchup with Wichita State.

Hensley said his staff, and K-State as a team, must commit to staying error-free to turn things around.

"It's not just about throwing a strike," he said. "It's about throwing a quality strike. It's about executing a pitch in a particular location. In the Big 12, if you're not doing that, it makes for a bad recipe."

"Especially if you've created opportunities with five or six walks, and a couple of hit batsmen."

"Next thing you know, the hit, or the homerun, or the chinker, comes back to haunt you."

We've got the stories you've got to read.

Keith feels vindicated by three music video awards for 'The Angry American' Country singer Toby Keith feels vindicated by the three video awards he won for his hawkish anthem "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)."

"The night we had tonight vindicates me for the controversy from that song," said Keith, who won video of the year, cocky video and best male video for the song during Country Music Television's 2003 Flameworthy Video Music Awards.

The lyrics include the lines that warn terrorists: "And you'll be sorry that you messed with/The U.S. of A./'Cause we'll put a boot in your ass/It's the American way."

PERSONALITY PROFILE

Bernard Pitts

DIRECTOR OF THE K-STATE STUDENT UNION

1. What would you like to have for dinner tonight?
"French dip sandwiches. I'm a beef and potato person, and it's something I know how to fix."

2. What is in your CD player right now or who is your favorite artist?
"Anything that's Motown. I like smooth jazz."

3. What kind of car do you drive?
"A Lexus. It's two-toned gray. We just bought a new Honda Pilot that my wife's driving."

4. What was the last movie you saw?
"Antwone Fisher." I thought it was great. I could relate to it. It was during the era I grew up."

5. What is your must-see TV show?
"I am a Discovery, History Channel, X-Files person. It's amazing how much information we didn't acquire during the K-12 years. It saves you from having to do research."

6. What is your favorite place to eat out?
"Fulton Crabhouse in Orlando. Locally, Harry's would have to be the place."

7. Who is your idol?
"My father. I appreciate his values and how he deals with crisis and his general wisdom."

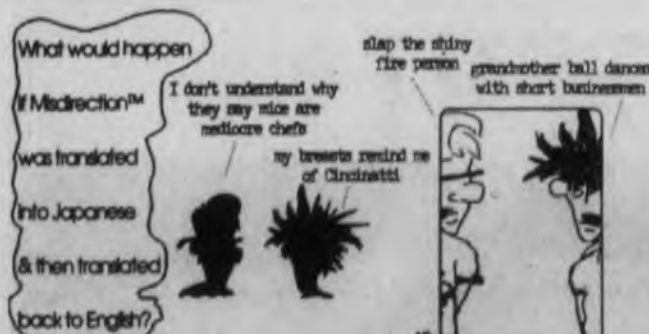

8. What is your favorite alcoholic drink?
"I don't drink, but I do enjoy a frozen strawberry daiquiri — virgin."

9. What is the craziest thing you did in college?
"I reported that I saw a flying saucer. My roommate and I were driving back from a party, and I swear I saw one. It's not intellectually wise to believe that we're the only universe with living objects."

10. Have you ever cheated on a test?
"Probably."

4-day week unlikely

USD 383 has no plans for shorter week

By Katie Lane
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Going to school for only four days a week isn't in the future of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

"A four-day school week is an interesting concept, and most of the districts that are going to it are using it to save money," said Bob Seymour, associate superintendent for the district. "It reduces the number of contact days that teachers see students. Philosophically, I think it's important that teachers are in contact with students, and the more days they are in contact with students, the better."

David Zumbahlen, superintendent for the Cheylin School District, said his district chose to change to a four-day school week to save money.

"It was money," Zumbahlen said. "The old superintendent, Richard Cain, estimated it would save $50,000. And that's mostly in transportation. We are a big school district - 688 square miles."

USD 383 would have to be in an extreme financial crisis before it decided to consider a four-day week, Seymour said.

"It would have to be a pretty severe problem, but cutting the number of contact days is a pretty serious issue," he said. "I would never say never, but I don't see it anywhere near on the horizon."

Calendar shifts for next fall

Committee asks for students' opinions

By Rogie Dörpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

This year's summer break will end three days earlier because of two added breaks for the upcoming fall semester.

Fall Break for the 2003 fall semester will be Oct. 13 and 14.

Fall break will be extended from one to two days and classes the Friday before fall finals will not be in session, said Sheldon BucI, student representative for the K-State Calendar Committee.

Now, the committee is trying to decide if the positives outweigh the negatives due to the change, he said.

BucI said the reason for the change was because the one-day fall break has been poorly planned in previous years.

In past years, the break has fallen on the Friday before a home football game or during All-University Homecoming, making it difficult for students to return home, BucI said.

"Students and faculty wanted something different and the committee decided on a two-day break so students could go

Baghdad celebrates

Iraqis topple ruler's statue

By Ravi Nessman and David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq - Iraqis celebrated the collapse of Saddam Hussein's regime Wednesday, beheading a toppled statue of their longtime ruler in downtown Baghdad and embracing American troops as liberators.

Iraqis released decades of pent-up fury as U.S. forces solidified their grip on the city. Marine tanks rolled to the eastern bank of the Tigris River; the Army was on the western side of the waterway that curls through the ancient city.

Looting broke out in the capital as Iraqis entered government facilities and made off with furniture, computers, and even military jeeps.

"We are not seeing any organized resistance," said Navy Capt. Frank Thorp at the U.S. Central Command. "The Iraqi military is unable to fight as an organized fighting force."

There was continued combat in cities to the north, though, where government troops were under attack from U.S. and British warplanes.

America At War

The scenes of liberation in Baghdad unfolded as the Pentagon announced that 101 American troops had died in the first three weeks of Operation Iraqi Freedom. Another 11 are missing and seven listed as captured. The British said 30 of their troops were dead. There are no reliable estimates for Iraqi casualties, although an Army spokesman said 7,300 prisoners had been taken.

The medical system was overrun with civilian casualties in Basra and Baghdad, cities where fighting has been fiercest. Doctors said 35 bodies and as many as 300 wounded Iraqis were brought to the al-Kindi hospital in the capital Tuesday.

Saddam's whereabouts remained a mystery, especially so since a bombing Monday night on a building where U.S. intelligence officials believed he and at least one of his sons were meeting.

It was "American Idol" on a small scale.

The Manhattan Town Center was filled with music Tuesday as area students ranging from kindergarten to high school came to the mall to show off their talents as a part of the Spring Music Festival.

Randy Crow, mall marketing director, said he was pleased with the outcome of the event.

"We've been doing the event for some time. Actually, it's the most popular event we've had," he said. "We've tried a number of different things, and kids are the most popular."

Each Tuesday until April 29, three finalists are picked to perform for a final competition May 6. Third place will receive a $100 gift certificate, second place $250 gift certificate, and first will receive a $500 gift certificate to the mall.

Festival

The Spring Music Festival talent shows take place every Tuesday from 6 to 7 p.m. until May 6. Students kindergarten through 12th grade can perform. Call Manhattan Town Center at 539-9207 for more information.

There will be a total of 18 finalists from which to choose, Crow said, and they will be judged on technical skill, audience appeal, stage presence and overall performance.

In addition to the final prizes, each weekly performer receives a prize from the mall.

K-State police officer graduates from elite FBI National Academy policing program

By Abbie Whited
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An estimated one-half of one percent of all law enforcement officers nationwide are allowed to attend the FBI National Academy, and one of K-State's own police officers recently graduated from there.

Sgt. Troy Lane received his diploma from FBI Director Robert Mueller on March 21 in Quantico, Va.

"As far as civilian law enforcement goes, this was probably the best experience possible," Lane said.

In 1999, he was nominated by Ronnie Grice, director of the K-State Police Department. The selection process is known to take an average of seven years, but Lane was chosen in 2002 to attend the Academy in January 2003.

Despite this accomplishment, Lane said he doesn't plan to leave K-State anytime soon.

"For right now, I'm staying here," he said. "I'll pass along the stuff I've learned, and I can use the contacts I've made."

Lane said his contacts already have come in handy.

"A guy I met from New York is already helping us out in a case," he said.

Lane said the best part of the academy was meeting a lot of different people.

"There were people from all over the world, so you get to meet a lot of different people," he said. "And you get to talk about different issues affecting law enforcement and the different approaches people take to problems — how people handle different situations."

Lane's graduating class was made up of 267 officers from 49 states and 26 foreign countries. He was the only one from Kansas.

During his 11-week stay, Lane earned 17 credit hours in courses such as "Managing Death and Sexually Related Investigations Using Psychology" and "Police Budgets and Grant Writings."

"They're real good courses," he said. "It was very similar to college. During the week, we were in class pretty much all day, every day."

Lane said he also completed the academy's Fitness Challenge.

"It's voluntary, but I think almost everyone does it," he said. "Most people do it for the pride."

The challenge consisted of a weekly run and was based on "The Wizard of Oz," Lane said.

"The first run was 1.8 miles, and the last run was over 6 miles with an obstacle course," he said. "Each week, the mileage progressed."

"Every week was themed after a different aspect of 'The Wizard of Oz,'" he said. "The last challenge was called 'The Yellow Brick Road,' so when we completed that run with the obstacle course, we got a yellow brick."

Now that he has graduated, Lane said he is part of the National Academy Associates.

"Currently, there are about 17,000 associates," he said. "After you go through the school, you can become an associate. I belong to the Western Missouri and Kansas chapter."

K-Stater a 'Price is Right' contestant

Student wins thousands in show prizes

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The price was right for Kate Walde this spring break.

When the third-year architecture student entered the popular game show's studio, she never would have guessed she would walk out with $45,625 in prizes from the "Price is Right" and one crazy story to tell her friends back at K-State.

"It is almost unbelievable," Walde said. "I just wanted to be in the audience. I never expected to be called on stage, let alone win all this stuff."

Not only was she the first contestant to "come on down," but she also was the first one on stage.

"The first item up for bid was camping gear," Walde said. "I guessed $725, and I was the closest one. I couldn't believe it."

Dressed in K-State purple, Walde ran onstage and gave Bob Barker, the longtime host, a traditional kiss.

"You get really wrapped up in the excitement," Gretchen Oxler, third-year architecture student, said. "We walked in, and it is like you are in a '70s dream. There is glitter everywhere. We were so caught up in the excitement, it took us a while to realize Kate was up there."

When they did realize, the group of third-year architecture students on an extended spring break went crazy, Walde said.

"They were all yelling and having a great time," she said. "We all had on purple shirts that said who we were and where we were from."

Walde played "The Bargain

Game" and won a couch and a cabinet, and then she went on to face two other contestants at the wheel.

"The older lady didn't spin anything close, but the gentleman spun 80 cents," she said about the game where contestants spin an oversized wheel with the hopes of getting closest to $1. "I thought, 'There is no way I am going to get between 80 cents and $1. The odds are too much against me.'"

But luck must have been on Walde's side because she spun 25 cents and then 75 cents — a combination that won her $1,000 and a spot in the Showcase Showdown.

The first showcase — a trip to Portugal for two, a dining-room set and a 32-piece crystal set — was passed on to Walde from the other contestant.

"Everyone knows there is a car or a Winnebago in one of the showcases," Walde said. "She was holding out for that."

With the help of her friend, Mike Postiglione, she decided to bid $14,400.

"The two contestants in the Showcase Showdown were able to have someone come down from the audience and help them decide what to bid," Postiglione, third-year architecture student, said. "I can't say I knew what the hell I was talking about, but together we decided the items cost $14,400 by estimating each one separately."

The other contestant decided her showcase — a 2003 PT Cruiser and Black and Decker power equipment — was worth $19,000.

"I knew she was way under," Walde said, "but I had no idea if I was anywhere close."

And then came Barker's memorable words: "The actual retail price of your showcase is $14,405" — only $5 more than what Walde bid, winning both her showcases.

"It was all a blur from there," Postiglione said. "We were running onstage, yelling. I am sure we were like two feet away from Bob Barker, but we were too excited to notice."

But now Walde has some tough decisions to make.

"I have no idea who I am going to take with me to Portugal, and I think I am going to use a lot of the furniture I won to pay taxes on the car and trip," she said.

The taxes on the car alone are $1,500, but Walde has a while to make those choices.

"I get the car in six to eight weeks, but they have until the middle of June to get everything else to me," she said. "I guess I am still in shock, though. I won't believe it until I see all this stuff arrive at my door. It is unbelievable."

Builders association criticized for giving money to campaign

By Mako Shores
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Area Builders Association is looking to change its membership status for city representatives after a local citizen complained about the group endorsing two candidates in the February City Commission primary race.

MABA members received an e-mail from the association asking them to vote for Ed Klimek and Mark Hatesohl. A $200 donation from the organization also was given to Hatesohl's campaign.

Assistant City Manager Diane Stoddard said a local resident criticized MABA's actions.

"Someone called in a complaint stating that employees of the city are not supposed to be involved in campaigning or endorsing people running for an office," Stoddard said.

The fact that city employees belong to an organization involved in candidate endorsement and use taxpayer money creates a problem since they are not supposed to be involved in political affairs, Stoddard said.

"We have made contributions to city candidates for years," Kirk Hoke, MABA president, said. "We have never thought this was a problem."

The relationship between MABA and the Codes Department is an important one, Stoddard said.

"We want to retain our involvement with MABA because they deal with building development, and we want to maintain that continuous communication because we deal with regulating the city's building codes."

"Using taxpayer money to endorse some candidates and not others is seen as unfair."

Kirk Hoke
MABA PRESIDENT

Hoke also said he appreciates the affiliation between the two organizations.

"We value the membership of the Codes Department," Hoke said. "They provide us with updates, new codes and regulations. This helps out and builds a relationship."

The problem also with using tax money was taken into account.

"Using taxpayer money to endorse some candidates and not others is seen as unfair," Hoke said.

City representatives are not members of MABA's Board of Directors. The board is responsible for choosing who it does and does not give contributions to — not the city employees, Hoke said.

MABA is looking to move to an ex-officio status, where city representatives would be present but would not pay dues or vote.

"We're looking into a non-voting membership or having them pay local dues and not use taxpayer money," Hoke said. "I've talked to the national association, and I'm still waiting for a response."

Either way, Hoke said, something will be done.

"If the national association can't find a way, we will address it locally," he said.

TO THE POINT

Students should find new days off beneficial

The University Calendar Committee's decision to change the 2003 fall break is a move in the right direction.

After persistent problems, the committee took action by adjusting this year's calendar, and the change is appreciated.

This fall, students will have a four-day weekend with plenty of time to rest, relax and refocus for the remainder of the semester.

By having Monday and Tuesday off, students will not have to worry about All-University Homecoming Week or a home football game deciding the fate of their fall break. Instead, students will have time to visit home for the weekend, the purpose fall break was originally intended to serve.

In addition, the decision to cancel classes the Friday before finals week gives students the chance to prepare for the week ahead.

Having this "stop day" is essential and helps students relax before they take the final examinations of the semester.

These small breaks in the semester allow students to regain focus in their classes, which is imperative to the university environment at K-State.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

THE NEW SLAVERY

Aristocracy still dominates modern world

In an effort to do our job as a progressive society, we have neglected to do our job.

The old Southern aristocracy exists now only in the hearts and minds of the most extreme of old-fashioned traditionalists. And conventional slavery has gone the way of White Snake, hot pants and wearing crushed velvet to church on the weekends.

Now, slavery seems to be making your child make his bed, getting only a scoop of ice cream and a couple Oreos for his troubles, but only after eating all of his vegetables.

We are entrenched in a new age of aristocracy, where everything isn't simply the Whigs versus the Tories, but man against his own creation. It is a slavery not imposed by an overriding class, but by all upon all with no preference of race, gender, religion or sexual orientation.

Instead, with things, ideas and distinctions that we want but don't have, we effectively enslave ourselves to ourselves to be what we are not, separating who we are and despising it for what it is not. Basking in our facade of what we think we are, want to be and become. This is the true battle of inner wits, struggling not to fall victim to our own motives and wants. The Battle of the Bulge becomes simply a conflict of the mind, separating what is truly defining in life from what society defines as life.

True separatism in our society came to bear with the closing of the last one-room schoolhouse and the beginning of formalized education.

As a society we began to breed division by level and classification. The cut-and-dry progressive process of going from first through 12th grade is a testament to a division of people, based solely by their perceived "education level" or ability to understand and grasp concepts and ideas. A process that is inherently faulty at making such assumptions about people and teaches those involved a sense of promotion from one level to the next, being better and smarter in fifth grade than in fourth, and thus better than those who are just in fourth grade.

From secondary school, separatism branches from ages and algebra, cliques and Cody "the popular kid," to politics, power and people you know and don't know.

Leaving the simplicity and oblivion that is adolescence, one can find hierarchy and social division at the turn of a corner.

It's not so much that people don't belong to something - it's that they haven't in the past and others have. Some might call that discrimination and elitism - and they're right.

But instead of raging against the machine from across the parking lot, accept the nature of the beast and work from the inside to make your mark.

Everything is always characterized as being either "inclusive" or "exclusive" in our society, which on the surface appears to be acceptable. But institutions, groups and organizations that are inclusive aren't highly sought-after in comparison because people consider the membership of something exclusive to be of higher value.

This is unfortunate, considering that, in theory,

"two heads are better than one," and thus being more open to others should be more advantageous for everyone.

However, membership beyond being a faceless voice in the crowd many times requires paperwork, screenings and interviews. Once again, you are at the mercy of a select few, trying to become exactly what you had fought against, what you had denied yourself as being, and what you were and have been all along - human.

Rowers unite for victory, bring home gold

GUEST COLUMNIST

While most normal people sleep after a long week, on a typical race weekend, the Kansas State Rowing Association works diligently to prepare for a full day of races. Whether the team is traveling out-of-state to Pennsylvania or traveling in-state to Wichita, the amount of preparation for boats remains the same.

Taking care of oars, riggers, boats and rowers is a constant undertaking that takes the concentration and efforts of each member of the team.

From the time the sun creeps up on the horizon to its peaceful descent beneath the waters of the race course, the memory that remains in the air is that of the camaraderie that pushed the team to its victory. Whether that victory is seen through an enthusiastic cheering section or through medals and trophies, the work that made up the day ends in fond memories for all.

Having rowed for the team for two years, I have begun to see these victories each time I attend a competition with my teammates. This past weekend at the Sunflower State Championships in Wichita, Kan., coaches and fellow rowers reminded me what it means to row as a team.

As the Men's Novice 8 race began on the cool Saturday morning, several teammates and I stood 500 meters from the finish line looking upstream in anticipation of the boats racing toward us.

When the purple hue of the eight KSRA rowers riding in their white boat came into sight, the audience erupted with cheers intended to encourage and motivate the rowers. Although it was difficult at first to see who led the pack of competing boats, our cheers rang loud and clear.

"K-S-U WILDCATS" echoed from our mouths toward those rowers who pushed their bodies to limits. As the KSRA Junior 8 Man boat passed us by, we erupted in even louder cheers.

Coach Rose looked at us and asked where the giant crowd stood, commenting that we cheered loud enough to resemble an audience of 50, despite only numbering 20. KSRA was doing well, comfortably leading KU by several boat lengths. Despite their comfortable lead, KSRA brought up the rate and intensity in the final 300 meters of the race, accelerating across the finish with a strong sense of victory.

After experiencing the KSRA's Novice 8 victory in the audience, I began to prepare for the Men's Varsity 4 event with my teammates. Our coxswain gathered with us in a circle, and we began our stretches and worked to motivate each other for the race.

Soon, we found ourselves jogging to the finish line and back to the boat to get the blood flowing through our veins. Upon returning to the boat, our coach waited in anticipation to speak to us about our racing game plan. As a boat, we had only practiced once the day before, so Jon worked to get us ready for the race.

He spoke of concentration and working together as a boat as the most important focus of the race, but most importantly to "open up and breathe" after the intense start of the race.

We soon found ourselves carrying the boat to the river and preparing to row up to the starting line. Working our way through pick drills and our proposed start, we then prepared to line up for the start alongside two KU boats. Once the boats were in line, the starting judge spoke the anticipated words "rowers ready ... and row."

After an intense start, we found ourselves half a boat length ahead of KU's lightweight 4 boat and with open water on KU's open 4 boat. The advice from coach rang in my head, to "open up and breathe," and I found myself pushing my body past barriers that the mind continually threw at me.

"Open up and breathe" became more than a literal meaning to concentrate on steady breathing, growing into a mental struggle of working through the pain to grow with the boat into a fluid harmony of strokes. As we grew together as a boat, we held off the KU lightweight 4 boat, who continually made slight advances on our lead, approaching our bow seat position.

... the memory that remains in the air is that of the camaraderie that pushed the team to its victory.

As we approached the last 500 meters, cheers from the audience pushed us toward our final sprint, which not only crept up from a stroke rate in the low 30s to the upper 30s, but also grew in power and control. This sprint in the last 300 meters of the race pushed our lead continually, until we found ourselves at the finish with a three-second lead over our closest competitors.

We rowed the boat from the finish line to the dock as a united boat with our oars on the square. As we docked and brought the boat out of the water, our coach showed his pride, telling us "that's the way to bring a boat in."

Through the efforts of all, victory had come into sight. The victories of the day were of two main breeds, that of coming together as a team to cheer each other on and also to attain the gold medals symbolizing our racing victories. These could not be attained without the support of our coaches and teammates, providing us with the extra push needed to overcome the barriers created by our bodies and mind and to become one as both a boat and a team.

When the next time to race comes along, we must remember the wisdom of our coaches, taking their advice to "open up and breathe."

SCHOOLS | USD 383 dismisses possibility of 4-day week for students attends classes Monday through Thursday and sometimes on Fridays. The district was forced to lengthen the school day to meet requirements.

"We increase the school day. We go from 8:15 to 4:15, with a half hour for lunch. It's a busy day for the kids," Zumbahlen said. "We've had to schedule an occasional Friday, and we give everybody a full two weeks off for Christmas."

Steve Clark, sixth-grade teacher at Bergman Elementary School, said his main concern with a four-day week is what the students will do on their day off.

"If all the kids are out of school on Fridays, what happens to the students?" Clark said. "My first question is where that day lies and what's going to happen [to] the community on that day off."

Eliminating class one day a week will result in longer classes, and keeping students' attention for that long could be a concern, Seymour said.

"Students are going to have to spend longer in classes," he said. "That's a problem. You can't take any more recesses than you would normally. It's going to be a very long, tiring day for them. I am not sure if they are going to be learning as much in four longer days than they would in five shorter days."

Zumbahlen said the only concern that was raised when Cheylin was changing to a four-day school week was finding day care for the children.

"The only negative we've come across is parents finding day care on Fridays. But other than that, it has been real positive."

Education is the core value for USD 383, and cutting a school day each week isn't a feasible solution, Clark said.

"I think what this school district would do is cut programs, then go to something like this," Clark said. "It's not one of the viable options for our district. We are such an education-minded community."

Deciding to change to a four-day school week will depend on the community, Zumbahlen said.

"Every community is different. Every community would have to study that and see what is best for that community. I would say it works well here because we do some traveling out here."

A three-day weekend could be appealing to some students, but Seymour said that because of extracurricular activities, students already have long days.

"There would be some students who would like it and some students who wouldn't," Seymour said. "Some of these kiddos put in pretty long days as it is. If you have to do it, you have to do it, but I don't think it's something that is attractive to us at this point."

piano Tuesday evening.

"I've been playing for about three or four years. I just like the piano," Sasha said.

Their mother, Alka Kapil, accounting specialist for the Department of Psychology at K-State, stood nervously while she watched her children perform.

Neil started last October, so he's kind of new at it," she said.

Julie Wendell, 15, of Beloit, Kan., said she had various reasons to sing the Dixie Chicks' "Traveling Soldier" in Tuesday evening's competition, in which she was a finalist.

"My sister has a boyfriend who is in the Air Force in Kuwait, and the first time she heard it, it meant a lot to her," Wendell said. "I just wanted to do it for her and him."

Another finalist was Bobby

Scharmann, 15, of Susan B. Anthony Middle School, who performed Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Sharp Minor on the piano.

"I normally practice an hour and a half to two hours a day," Scharmann said. "My music teacher thought I could do it."

Krystina Cover, 8, of Junction City did not make the final round.

However, the audience enjoyed her performance of "Rockin' Robin" in her red sequined outfit and boots.

"It's basically both our ideas. She does a lot of pageantry, and this was to help prepare her for it," Cover's mother, Lisa, said.

The last finalist performance chosen was the trio of Rechelle Malin and her two sons, Ethan, 6, and Calder, 8. Both Calder and Ethan played the violin, while their mother accompanied them on the guitar.

CALENDAR | Changes include longer fall break, day off before finals

home," he said.

The committee decides on the year's schedule the summer before every fiscal year, Bucl said. After it is decided, the calendar is approved by the Kansas Board of Regents.

He said the committee tries to project the calendar for five years in advance, and the only Regents requirement is that there are 75 days in class per semester. K-State has 76 for the spring semester.

While the committee likes the changes made, there are some who do not appreciate the shift.

"When we shared the information with the Faculty Senate, there were lots of objections with the two-day fall break and major objections in starting a week ahead in the fall," said Cia Verschelden, chair of the calendar committee.

"There were lots of good reasons for people to object. And I think the decision should be reconsidered," she said.

When the first fall break was approved, students and faculty both agreed on it. However, the changes for next fall have not been approved through Student Senate or Faculty Senate.

Bucl said having the schedule set before getting it approved by both committees was due to an error in the reporting process of the committee, since there isn't a formalized process on how to change the calendar.

Dave Rintoul, associate director of the Department of Biology, said his classes, notably labs, not meeting the Friday before finals will force him to cancel his Thursday lab as well to keep both classes in sync.

"At times, when people are having to pay more for their education, I just don't think they're getting their money's worth when we have to do things like that," he said.

However, Verschelden said that after hearing input from the calendar change, the committee is asking that in the coming years, student government advocate for the breaks.

A decision for the fall 2004 calendar needs to be made before June 1, she said.

"I suspect some students would rather have a longer summer and once they come back in the fall to just stay and not have more breaks," Verschelden said.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES

By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled...or have already failed...you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight...or loses weight...the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.

2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating - how often and at what times during the day - causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.

3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

Roy should move

CHRIS SHANK

Monday was a good night. Not only did I get to witness the University of Kansas lose the national championship, but I also got to see Roy Williams lose his composure on national television.

I'll make this very clear: I hate Roy Williams and KU. Like Joel Reichenberger said in his Wednesday column, "Hate KU. It's more fun that way."

Joel couldn't have hit the nail more squarely on the head.

Roy Williams has been the media's golden child since he arrived at KU. Williams' photos are always splashed across the state's newspapers. Local sports coverage on state newscasts is full of Williams' press-conference clips from November until April.

Granted, Coach Bill Snyder gets some coverage, but it pales in comparison to the media's love of Roy.

Maybe it's his usually glowing comments.

Or his "Aw, shucks, I'm just a nice guy that everyone should love" routine.

But it's easy to be friendly and cordial when you are winning. It's after losses that one's true character shines through.

After the game, CBS reporter Bonnie Bernstein asked Williams about the likelihood of him leaving for North Carolina. Williams went ballistic on national television.

It's nothing new for coaches and athletes to be angry with sideline reporters or press conferences, but I will never respect those individuals.

For example, can anyone imagine Snyder, Cal Ripken Jr. or Michael Jordan ever acting in such a fashion? No.

They have class, and they don't have a track record of crying in public.

A Kansas City Star columnist wrote Wednesday that it was Bernstein's fault for causing Williams' flareup. However, there is only one person to blame for these "pointed" questions — Williams himself.

If he's not skipping town for Chapel Hill, all he had to say was he wanted to stay at KU.

If he's not willing to pledge complete loyalty, then he'd better get used to being asked about job openings.

On Wednesday, another press conference took place, announcing the firing of KU athletic director Al Bohl. Even though KU granted this concession in hopes of keeping Williams at KU, he still is interested in North Carolina.

KU chancellor Robert Hemenway abdicated the power of hiring and firing the athletic director to Williams.

If Williams has that much power, KU might as well combine positions and name Williams as dictator or Caesar of the KU Empire.

Better yet, they could have a coronation ceremony and proclaim him emperor of Kansas.

The entire "Roy Williams Saga: Desperation and Anguish Part II" will be played out in Lawrence in the next couple of days. It will be fun to see the Crimson and Blue nation make signs like first-grade students pleading for Roy to stay.

The fate of their "storied" program hangs in the balance.

With K-State's recruiting class — ranked No. 1 by some national recruiting circles — coming to a basketball court near you soon, KU fans know Wooldridge's Cats are getting better. Along with Collison, Hinrich and possibly Williams gone, the state's basketball spotlight could move back to the right place — in Manhattan.

This week, hopefully we all will get to see another Roy Williams' press conference — this one announcing Williams' move to North Carolina.

Netters to play Kansas

Cats don't see rivalry as focus

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Looking to continue its four-match winning streak, the 34th-ranked tennis team will travel to Lawrence on Saturday for a matchup against conference rival the University of Kansas. The match is slated to begin at noon at the Robinson Courts.

Coach Steve Bietau said his team isn't concerned about the rivalry at this point in the season.

"There may be (a rivalry) for a lot of people, but I'm not sure there is for our team," Bietau said. "We've approached the last two months of the season as tough, serious matches that are going to require us to play well. It really goes against what we've been doing to single out one as wanting to win more. It's another potential step for our team."

Rivalry aside, Bietau said his team will look to improve from last spring's 4-3 loss to the Jayhawks in Manhattan.

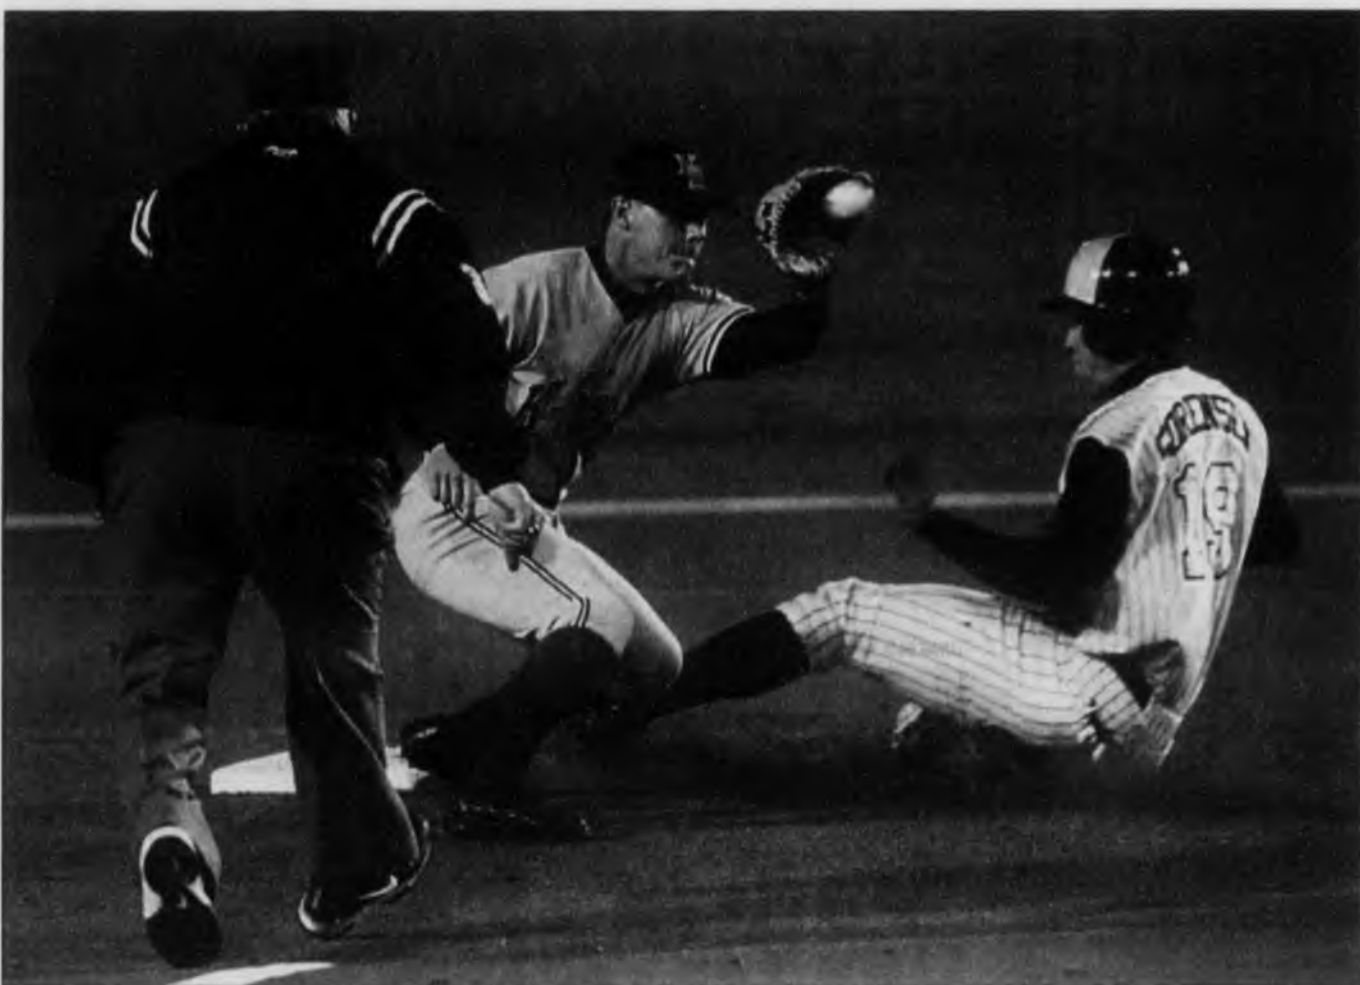

"If you say to them, 'You lost to them last year,' I would say that a lot of them would say 'we don't want to lose to

Cats' skid hits 12 with 13-2 loss to Wichita State

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last week and a half has been among the toughest stretches of baseball for Coach Mike Clark to swallow.

On Wednesday night, that lump got one loss larger.

Trying to avoid matching K-State's (10-20) longest losing streak during Clark's 17-year tenure, Wichita State (24-11) extended the Cats' skid to 12 straight Wednesday night during a 13-2 win at Eck Stadium in Wichita.

Six K-State pitchers surrendered 14 hits, and the Shockers plated four runs in three different innings in shutting down the Cats.

The win ran WSU's winning streak over K-State to five straight. The Wildcats haven't won since a 21-2 decision over Rider on March 21.

Wichita State took the teams' first contest this season 14-10 on March 26 in Manhattan, and the Shockers now have taken 12 of the series' last 13 meetings.

"It's very frustrating for everybody right now," Clark said.

Maybe even more so for Clark, a former pitcher in his days at Missouri Western.

"You just want to grab the ball and go out and pitch," Clark said, "but my eligibility is up, and my stuff isn't very good. We're all just terribly frustrated, and if there was some way I could do something to change it, I'd do it in a second."

It didn't take long for Wichita State to jump on K-State's young arms.

After a scoreless first inning, the Shockers opened the scoring with four runs in the second highlighted by catcher Joe Muich's two-run single to left center off Wildcat starter Jared Britte (0-2).

Zone 9 competition next step in equestrian's postseason

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's equestrian team will attempt to advance its English team and 11 individuals to the IHSA National Championships when they compete at zone competition this weekend.

St. Mary's-of-the Woods in Terre Haute, Ind., will be host to the Zone 9 English show, while Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind., will be host to the Western show.

The English team must finish in the top two to advance to nationals May 1-5 in Murfreesboro, Tenn. Individuals can advance by finishing in the top two in their respective disciplines, while the Western team will compete at zones even though they already have secured a berth at nationals.

Coach Lindsay Breidenthal said her team is prepared for the postseason's challenges.

"We have a very positive outlook," Breidenthal said.

"We've had a great year and accomplished more than I ever thought we would."

That might prove difficult. K-State has been among the nation's best all season. The Western team won six regular season shows while claiming the High-Point rider in six of 10.

"We've all worked really hard," senior Amanda Gigot said.

The English team won five of its last six regular-season shows and had individuals claim titles in six of nine categories at Region 2 competition.

Many storylines are set to unfold as the postseason continues. One is junior Brandi Vogel's quest to defend K-State's first individual national championship.

Last season's title was at intermediate, however. Vogel's sights now are set on open reining and horsemanship.

"She's a strong enough rider that she can handle it,"

Western individuals

- Megan Hemberger - intermediate
- Elaine Cobb - intermediate
- Amanda Gigot - open reining
- Brandi Vogel - open reining and horsemanship

English individuals

- Jessica Gittleman - walk/trot
- Julie Hufft - walk/trot/canter
- Natalie Bennett - novice fences and flat
- Jacquie Griffin - open flat
- Melissa Thompson - intermediate flat
- Allison Woodworth - open fences and flat
- Dehila Burdan - open fences and flat

Western team

- Amanda Gigot
- Erin Peery
- Kristin Tanney
- Lauren Allen
- Katie Myers

English team

- Allison Woodworth
- Lauren Demmel
- Natalie Bennett
- Summer Hamill
- Jenea Grossart
- Natalie Poholsky
- Anne Brameier

Breidenthal said.

Another storyline is that of Gigot, Western's Region 2 High-Point Rider.

"The last three years, I've had the worst luck of anybody," Gigot said. "Now is my chance. I'm a senior, so it's a great way to end my career on the team."

The most important storyline, however, might be the English and Western teams' attempts to capture K-State's first team titles.

"I've already been training my national team," Breidenthal said. "We've been working toward that all season long."

Regardless of the outcome, Breidenthal said her team fulfilled its expectations.

"They've done a good job of accomplishing their goals, and they've accomplished each of my goals as a coach," she said.

College | Bohl out as KU athletic director
The University of Kansas fired athletic director Al Bohl on Wednesday, a move widely viewed as an effort to persuade men's basketball coach Roy Williams to remain at the school.

"I would not resign," Bohl told The Associated Press at a press conference at his home. "I was fired."

Hired in 2001 to replace Williams' close friend and longtime Jayhawk athletic director Bob Frederick, Bohl clashed early and often with the popular basketball coach.

Golf | Augusta chairman doesn't budge

On the eve of The Masters, Hootie Johnson refused to back down once again on the issue of women members, saying he will not change his mind and that the controversy will not damage the tournament.

With more than 60 green-jacketed members standing by in silent support, the Augusta National chairman said the club is united in the belief that it has a right to choose its members.

"It's not my issue alone," Johnson said Wednesday. "If I drop dead this second, our position will not change."

High school | LeBron shouldn't have played

A judge ruled against LeBron James on Wednesday, agreeing with Ohio high school officials that the basketball star should not have been allowed to play for a state championship.

However, Summit County Common Pleas Judge James R. Williams said the Ohio High School Athletic Association cannot force Akron St. Vincent-St. Mary to forfeit any victories because of his ruling.

College basketball | Calipari staying put

Memphis coach John Calipari, mentioned as a candidate for several job openings, issued a statement Wednesday insisting that he isn't leaving the Tigers.

The Tigers are 71-31 in his three seasons, which included this season's NCAA berth, the program's first since 1996.

NFL | Spurrier attempts to calm Jets' nerves

Washington Redskins coach Steve Spurrier attempted Wednesday to smooth things over with the New York Jets, from whom his team has signed four free agents.

Kick returner-running back Chad Morton was introduced Wednesday as the fourth Jets player to move to the Redskins this offseason.

Morton was awarded to the Redskins on Monday by an arbitrator who ruled that the Jets did not fully match Washington's five-year, $8 million offer to the restricted free agent. The arbitrator, Richard Bloch, is a Redskins season-ticket holder, the New York Post reported Tuesday.

Saturday Night Live's Darrell Hammond to perform at McCain

By J. Scott Bowman
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A combination of Bill Clinton, Dick Cheney, Rudolph Giuliani, Ted Koppel, Jesse Jackson and Sean Connery will be in town Monday in the form of comedian Darrell Hammond.

Hammond, famous for his impressions on "Saturday Night Live," will be performing at McCain Auditorium. Because of the turnout for comedian Lewis Black last semester, an even bigger comedian seemed like the next step, said Dana Watts, Union Program Council program adviser.

"We had a lot of success with Lewis Black," Watts said. "We figured a bigger name was the next logical step. He's a very funny comedian who has spent six seasons with 'Saturday Night Live.' He's very versatile and does great impressions."

She said that about 1,500 people showed up for Lewis Black, and she expects a similar turnout for Hammond.

Watts said Hammond's standup stood out from the other choices UPC organizers considered. She said they deal with several agencies and can get anyone on the college circuit, but UPC really enjoyed Hammond's comedy.

"I think that 'Saturday Night Live' is a very popular show with the college students," Watts said. "He has done a variety of shows. He's been featured on Comedy Central as a one-man act, and it was funny. I think that Comedy Central is also very popular with college kids."

UPC is made up of student leaders who sift through talent, and their decisions are approved by the professional staff, Watts said.

His stand-up comedy is definitely top-notch, said Sarah Montgomery, entertainment committee chair for UPC.

"I think what made him our choice is the tape of him that we watched," Montgomery, senior in public relations, said.

"He does good impressions, and some people that do aren't as good at stand-up. But his was hilarious, and he did a few impressions, too."

Montgomery said the standup is geared toward college students. However, she said, it won't be just students going out to have a laugh.

"Pretty much everybody will enjoy it," Montgomery said. "I've talked to students in several different organizations that are going."

"I know some greeks, people in the residence halls, people living off-campus and some older people, like my faculty, who are all going."

TENNIS | Team looks to continue winning streak in match against KU

them twice," Bietau said.

One area the Cats have been working on lately has been the play of their doubles teams. Bietau said that despite winning the doubles point in Saturday's 5-2 victory over Colorado, there is still room for improvement.

"In general, reducing unforced errors, putting balls away when we have the opportunity and keeping the ball in play longer when it's appropriate to do that (are the areas of focus)," Bietau said.

Led by junior Emily Haylock, who is 14-15 this season at No. 3 singles, the Jayhawks will look to improve on their 46-4 record against the Cats. The last time K-State knocked them off was during a 5-2 victory in Lawrence in 2001.

Records and in-state pride aside, though, Bietau said he is expecting another good match from a conference opponent.

No. 34 K-State at No. 61 Kansas

Singles

1. Petra Sedlmajerova, K-State vs. Courtney Steinbock, KU
2. Maria Rosenberg, K-State vs. Paige Brown, KU
3. Jessica Simosa, K-State vs. Emily Haylock, KU
4. Paulina Castillejos, K-State vs. Christine Skoda, KU
5. Hayley McIver, K-State vs. Kim Lorenz, KU
6. Andrea Cooper, K-State vs. Luiza Loureiro, KU

Doubles

1. Castillejos/Sedlmajerova, K-State vs. Courtney Steinbock/Kristen Steinbock, KU
2. Cooper/McIver, K-State vs. Haylock/Brown, KU
3. Simosa/Rosenberg, K-State vs. Skoda/Lorenz, KU

"It's going to be a tough match," Bietau said. "It's always tough over there, and we are looking forward to the opportunity to play and work on getting better."

CAMPUS JOBS | University Gardens offers flexible work hours

She said the gardens include native Kansas grasses, day lilies, irises, annual and perennial beds.

Marie Noll, senior in animal science, also has worked at University Gardens for about two years.

"Maintenance is what takes up most of my time, pruning stuff back and different things," she said. "The rose garden is a lot of work, too."

She said although much of the work takes place outside, there is also work to be done during the winter months.

"We also work in the butterfly conservatory located basically in the middle of the garden," she said.

"There is a desert side and a tropical side for the butterflies and plenty to do."

Noll said many horticulture classes visit the garden area to identify and learn about different species, and entomology students utilize the butterfly garden.

She said visitors also come to the garden.

"They can go to the visitors' center and see the different phases of the garden's development," she said.

"There are three phases of development, and right now, we're in phase 1 of the plan, including the irises and daylily beds."

Noll said that besides the educational value, she enjoys working 10 to 12 hours each week. She works every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon, working around her class schedule.

"It's very convenient and nice," she said.

"I get to work outside. Since I come from an agriculture background, I like being outside."

BASEBALL | Local children, teens compete in talent contest

Wichita State would chase Brite from the mound three batters later with the last run of the inning, but four runs were all the Shockers would need against K-State.

The Cats got one run in each of the third and fourth innings, but otherwise K-State's offense was kept in check by Shocker starter Steve Uhlmansiek (4-1), who got the win after scattering five hits over five innings.

"We hit the ball hard," Clark said. "We had a couple of opportunities where we hit the ball right on the nose."

But those opportunities were snuffed out as quickly as they appeared, and the Cats would manage no more than two hits in an inning the rest of the way.

Meanwhile, the Shockers were making sure K-State's defense received plenty of exercise.

A four-run fifth inning featured six hits off two more Wildcat pitchers.

After a scoreless K-State sixth, Wichita State extended the lead to 9-2 in their half of the frame.

"When our pitching staff isn't executing, it just makes everything ugly and everything terrible," Clark said.

For good measure, the Shockers added four more in the eighth with back-to-back homers by Cody Clark and Mark Johnson.

"It makes it really tough when you have to score 10 or more runs to win a baseball game," Clark said. "That's what we've got to get turned around."

SARS not yet a threat

Officials say locals should not fear virus

By Kelli Pitman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, or SARS, is a newly discovered viral disease that has recently been reported in Asia, North America and Europe. Originating in China, the disease has infected 2,888 people and has taken the lives of 108 people.

There have been 149 cases reported in the United States, including one possible case reported in Wichita. However, no fatalities have been reported within the United States.

Jay Reppert, physician at Lafene Health Center, said there is no report of the disease spreading in the United States, and there is no reason for people in the community to be concerned about contracting the disease.

It seems SARS is spread through droplets in the air, such as when someone sneezes or coughs. However, it is still being tested to find if the disease is truly airborne.

Dean pleads innocent to charges

4-day trial to take place in September

By April Middleton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kent Dean, former Manhattan liquor store owner, pled innocent Thursday to two charges he is facing in Pottawatomie County.

He is being charged with one count of intent to sell or distribute cocaine and one count of aggravated battery.

The charges stem from an April 26, 2002, event at the Little Grill, 6625 Dyer Road, during which time the prosecution alleges Dean contaminated a woman's drink with cocaine.

The four-day trial will begin at 9 a.m., Sept. 22, at the Pottawatomie County Courthouse in Westmoreland.

Pedro Irigonegaray, Dean's attorney, requested the court date to be so far in the future to allow the ongoing criminal sodomy and aggravated restraint case against Dean in Riley County to be concluded.

A mistrial was declared in that case Thursday, and Irigonegaray said he anticipates it coming before the court again in the near future.

The cocaine charge Dean is facing in Pottawatomie County could carry a jail sentence of between 14 and 51 months and/or a fine not to exceed $300,000.

There are two alternative punishments for the second charge Dean faces. He could receive between 38 and 172 months of jail time and a fine not to exceed $300,000 for the aggravated battery charge with the first alternative or between 7 and 23 months jail time and a fine not to exceed $100,000 with the second alternative.

Kurds sweep into Iraq

Freedom for Iraq near

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kurdish and American forces swept into Kirkuk and other areas around Iraq's rich northern oil fields Thursday, fresh evidence that Saddam Hussein's regime was history. "Your nation will soon be free," President Bush promised Iraqis in a televised address.

There were new American casualties in Baghdad, 24 hours after the capital fell to U.S. forces. One Marine was killed and as many as 20 injured in a daylong fight triggered by Iraqi gunfire on the city's northern edge. Another four Marines were injured in a suicide bombing at a military checkpoint after dark.

America At War

Widespread looting afflicted the capital as well, and commanders in one Marine regiment received new orders to try to prevent it at their discretion.

In the southern city of Najaf, two Islamic clerics were hacked to death by a furious crowd at one of Shiite Islam's holiest shrines, witnesses said.

One of the clerics killed, Haider al-Kadar, was a widely hated loyalist of Saddam, part of the Iraqi leader's ministry of religion. The other was Abdul Majid al-Khoei, a high-ranking Shiite cleric and son of one of the religion's most prominent spiritual leaders who was persecuted by Saddam. They were killed at a meeting meant to serve as a model for reconciliation in post-Saddam Iraq.

Nearly 100 miles north of Baghdad, U.S. commanders were turning their focus on Tikrit, Saddam's birthplace and likely site of a last stand by his armed forces if there is to be one. "Some of it has been unconventional," Maj.

Gen. Gene Renuart said of military preparations, signaling the presence of U.S. commandos in the area.

The 101st Airborne Division reported destroying more than 120 pieces of Iraqi equipment while on a reconnaissance mission near Hillal, including tanks, armored personnel equipment and field artillery systems.

Warplanes also bombed Iraqi positions near the border with Syria, where special forces were trying to prevent regime loyalists from slipping out of Iraq and to keep foreign fighters from entering.

NATURAL BEAUTY

Evan Semón | COLLEGIAN

An outline of a girl made of dandelions, sticks and dead grass rests in the grass outside the International Student Center on Wednesday afternoon. The outline was the product of students enrolled in Art 425 — Art for Elementary Education Majors.

Education students examine natural art

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The chalk outline of an Olympic torch-bearer who tragically fell from a tree and stumbled to her death somehow brightened the green grass around it.

The outline — which used dandelions, sticks and dead grass instead of chalk — was part of a study of artist Andy Goldsworthy, who used nature to produce art.

"It just goes to show you that nature and earth offer enough materials to be artistic," Ellen Gasser, sophomore in elementary education, said.

The study of Goldsworthy's art and influence was part of the curriculum for Art 425 — Art for Elementary Education Majors.

Gasser said learning about Goldsworthy's techniques would prove beneficial for elementary education majors as they face budget cuts for art programs in schools.

Karen Lauseng, instructor of art, said the class involves a series of art projects, and the art in nature project is only part of the curriculum covered in the class. Other projects include a quilt with felt blocks and a carved potato to be used as a stamp.

"They talk about different ideas and how it would relate to different subjects," she said.

Art projects can be incorporated into lessons in all subjects, including geology, geography, history, reading and science — if the teacher uses his or her imagination to make the connections, Lauseng said.

Amanda Freund, junior in art, is not planning to be a teacher, but said she intends to use the lessons from the class with the children she works with.

As a nanny, Freund said she is always looking for activities for the children.

"I took this class for experience with kids," she said, "and lots of this stuff you can incorporate with small kids."

Freund said she would like to work with children with disabilities after she graduates. She said art is good therapy and could be used to benefit children with special needs.

"I didn't want to be stuck in a school," she said, "but I definitely want to work with kids."

Gasser and most other students who take the class, though, do plan to work in schools as elementary teachers. Gasser said Goldsworthy's works teach not only about the importance and beauty of nature, but also about creativity and imagination.

"He used thorns and flexible vines to sew things together," she said. "He used his spit to make ice sculptures."

"People use man-made stuff, and you don't need it. Nature itself is beautiful enough."

Gay men among those unable to donate blood to Red Cross

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jeff Powell wants to participate in the weeklong American Red Cross K-State Blood Drive, but he can't. He's gay and prohibited from donating blood.

According to American Red Cross regulations, people with a higher risk of contracting the AIDS virus are among those who cannot donate blood. This includes males who have had sex with another male since 1977.

Scott McFall, student coordinator for the blood drive, said although the American Red Cross does not want to limit its donor group, its first priority is safety.

"We never want to discourage people from giving blood, but at the same time, they have to take the proper precautions. They don't want to look down on anybody — they just want to protect the people that give the blood and get the blood," he said. "They're

Benefits of organically grown foods, vegetables add to recent popularity

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Well-washed or not, some consumers are concerned that vegetables and fruit they eat might contain toxins and high levels of pesticides.

Consumers can purchase organically grown foods to avoid these concerns.

Campus Connection

Issues that are important here at K-State are also important at other universities around the nation. Read each Friday about one issue that affects students at K-State, as well as another campus.

"I think stories in the news that have highlighted food dangers cause alarm and increase the demand for organically grown fruits and vegetables," she said.

The National Organic Program requires organic foods to be produced without using most conventional pesticides or fertilizers made with synthetic ingredients. The USDA Organic seal tells consumers a product is at least 95 percent organic.

Organic dairy also is becoming more popular because of concerns with the growth hormones used in cows, Martin said.

Because of the extra care taken to avoid toxins and pesticides, growing organic food is slightly more expensive.

Martin said organic foods are usually more expensive than conventionally grown foods because of the close eye kept on farmers.

"The documentation required to grow is extensive," he said. "You have to prove everything you claim."

He said growing organic foods is also a lot more labor intensive, and it leaves "a great paper trail from the producer to the consumer."

The idea of producing things organically doesn't just include food. Some health and beauty aids are also organically produced.

"We promote a lifestyle that is sustainable," he said. "It's a lifestyle that more and more people are getting in tune to."

He said the national trend for consumers purchasing organically grown food is about 23 percent.

This is a trend Olson is familiar with. "It is definitely growing," she said. "It is even finding its way into mainstream grocery stores and creating awareness."

Organic foods have various pros, cons

By Victoria Edwards
MICHIGAN DAILY

ANN ARBOR, Mich. - According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, organic farming is one of the fastest-growing segments of agriculture in America.

The most recent estimate puts retail sales of organic foods at more than $7.8 billion, with nearly half purchased at conventional grocery stores. The reasons for the high demand in organic food vary directly with the people consuming them.

For Ann Arbor, Mich., resident James Middrestaat, eating organic food products is not just pretense, but rather a way of life. "I eat a totally vegan-style diet," he said.

"We should eat the natural grain and fruits of our mother, not destroy the mother by killing off the creatures of the land."

Middrestaat is not alone in aligning his diet with his views. People's Co-op General Manager Carol Collins said her organic food store also concentrates on the ideology behind natural eating.

"Organic as a philosophy is about sustainable living. Many of the organic farms are smaller and family-run. Whereas other food is pumped full of chemicals, organic food is only made with natural ingredients and won't harm your body in any way," Collins said.

Besides voicing a strong belief in keeping the body's nutrients natural, Collins said her store is also very concerned with the state of the environment.

"Organic food is not just for personal health but for the health of the environment," Collins said.

"Organic (food) supports a cleaner environment, and people with cleaner farming practices. Some people who use chemicals get support from the government whereas organic farmers don't."

She said that in addition to selling groceries, they have a concern for environment, concern for community, business honesty and corporate ownership.

"We have a lot of integrity," Collins said.

"We support the local grower and are aligned with peace and social justice movements. We try to support this along with the vegetarian and organic foods."

Collins said her store's vision and support of organic farmers is in sharp contrast with stores that sell products produced by traditional farming.

"With traditional farming, there are pesticides that pollute the streams," Collins said.

But these environmentally-safer farming practices come with a price, Kyle Marsh, sophomore in engineering, said.

"I know that (organic foods are) grown according to nature. And they try not to use chemicals. It is very healthy, (and) I wish I could get more of it, but it is expensive," Marsh said.

But Dave Boutdite, Ann Arbor spokesman for Whole Foods, said there are ways to get around the high prices of organic food.

"Anyone selling organic food always has something on sale. In the produce department there are a minimum of 10 things on sale that are comparable to conventional products around the same price," he said.

But Kroger manager Bill Rowe, said that although his grocery store had an organic section in their store, it will never sell exclusively organic products because organic foods are not available in the mass quantities needed for a store like Kroger.

Boutdite also voiced this sentiment in saying that one large downside to organic produce is the limited availability.

"Only two percent of all produce produced in the United States is organic. So the availability of the products can be hard to come by," he said.

Taco Bell store to leave Union

Eddies Pepper will replace taco restaurant

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No quieren Taco Bell. Officials at the K-State Student Union have made arrangements to replace the Taco Bell restaurant in the Union Food Court with a new Mexican-style establishment, Eddies Pepper.

Eric Braun, Union dining director, said Taco Bell's contract with the Union will expire this summer, and Eddies Pepper will be taking its place.

The driving force behind the decision, Braun said, was that all revenue generated by Taco Bell goes to the franchise owner, while Eddies Pepper's profits will become part of the Union's general fund.

The new restaurant offers food and portions similar to Taco Bell's, Braun said, and the prices also are comparable.

Some students, though, expressed concern about the change.

"I think that stinks," said Angie Torres, graduate student in speech pathology. "I'll be sad to see Taco Bell go."

Braun said there hasn't been much concern from officials about losing the big-name, national chain of Taco Bell. Students have embraced other lesser-known restaurants in the Union, he said, including Noble Roman's Pizzeria.

"It helps us fulfill the Union's mission," Braun said, "of being a home for students and faculty and add to campus life."

Changing the makeup of the Union Food Court helps keep things fresh for Union patrons, Braun said.

"If we kept the same food, we'd be unable to add versatility," he said. "People get bored with the same thing all the time. We want to keep things new and fresh and different."

Jeremy Branson, junior in construction science, said he eats Taco Bell in the Union about once a week. He said he is willing to try Eddies Pepper and is glad that the Union officials decided to keep a Mexican-style restaurant.

"They need to keep that flavor in the food court," he said.

The process to replace Taco Bell began more than a year ago, Braun said. Research and taste tests were conducted to get a feel for how accepting the K-State community would be of Eddies Pepper food.

Overall, the response was positive, he said, with more than 90 percent of respondents commenting that they liked the food and would purchase it.

The Union Governing Board also was involved throughout the search, Braun said.

Braun said Eddies Pepper should be in the Union by the beginning of the fall semester.

Burger King's contract with the Union also runs out next year. Braun said work has already begun on researching possible hamburger restaurants to replace Burger King.

"We're trying to bring new food concepts, and so far our efforts have been positive," he said. "We want to keep something new in front of our customers."

Downtown zoning request from restaurant denied

Planning board says rejection based on future of property

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An important corner in Manhattan will remain vacant after zoning requests for a new restaurant failed.

Jon Schmitt, owner of Hays-based Taco Shop, requested zoning changes to the property at the corner of Juliette and Poyntz avenues so he could open a branch in the old Manhattan Floral Company building.

Jerry Reynard, Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board member, said the zoning request failed at the board meeting Monday because the zoning change could open up the downtown Manhattan business district to potentially unfavorable neighbors.

"We aren't opposed to the restaurant, we were just concerned with what could eventually go in there," Reynard said.

Reynard said the property is currently zoned as a C-1 property. He said a C-1 classification means the property is very restricted on what type of business can be opened there.

"It's a highly restrictive area because everyone who comes into Manhattan will drive by there," he said.

Jim Reed, senior pastor of First United Methodist Church, said although he and some members of his congregation were opposed to having the Taco Shop as a neighbor, it had nothing to do with the restaurant and everything to do with the zoning change.

"The main reason was we felt a C-4 zoning for that property put it out of character for this area," he said. "It has nothing to do with the Taco Shop. It just has to do with the type of zoning."

Robert Keener, vice president of the Taco Shop, said that although they were disappointed with not getting the spot, they were looking forward to coming to Manhattan anyway.

"We see a lot of similarities between Manhattan and Hays, and we want to come there," he said.

Reed said although the zoning request was denied, he hopes the Taco Shop will find somewhere else in Manhattan to open.

"We want to be encouraging the Taco Shop to come to town," he said. "They have been most gracious through the whole thing."

Reynard said he, too, would like to see the Taco Shop open in Manhattan.

"We hope the Taco Shop does come to Manhattan, it's good food," he said.

Keener said there are still plans to open in Manhattan, and talks are underway with several other property owners.

Gay males not treated fairly by blood screening

An American Red Cross regulation banning some gay males from donating blood has raised concerns.

The regulation states that a male who has had sex with another male since 1977, or a female who has had sex with another male who has had a male sex partner since 1977, is not allowed to donate blood.

While a strict screening process is necessary, a change in wording should be considered. AIDS no longer is a homosexual disease.

There is more information today on how these diseases are contracted. Research has proven that heterosexuals are also at risk of contracting the diseases. Any individual who participates in unprotected sex runs the risk of contracting HIV and AIDS.

This regulation is eliminating a large portion of males who are qualified to donate blood based strictly on their sexual preference. It should be further examined and reworded to include more potential donors.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

MYSTERY ILLNESS

SARS crisis made worse by government mistakes

It's funny how a war can dominate the world's attention. In times of peace, another story entirely would be the main headline.

That would be the SARS outbreak in Hong Kong and southeast China, an epidemic that could reach plague proportions before all is said and done. This primarily will be due to the ineptitude of the affected countries' governments.

SARS stands for Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome. When it was first diagnosed, doctors thought it was a particularly virulent pneumonia.

Now, however, they think it may be a sort of mutant killer cold.

Regardless, at last count, 2,819 people were infected and 103 have died from it. More are sure to follow at the current rate.

SARS causes high fevers and respiratory difficulties like coughing and shortness of breath. It is less infectious than influenza, and doctors believe it takes repeated close contact with an infected person to catch it.

The deadliness of SARS lies in its resistance to conventional drugs like antibiotics. In a very few cases, according to CNN.com, "a cocktail of drugs including the antiviral drug ribavirin and steroids" has been effective treatment.

Possibly worse than the disease itself, which will hopefully be contained by quarantine protocols, is the economic effect it will have on the region.

The World Health Organization issued a travel advisory for the Guangdong province in China and Hong Kong. Tourism has subsequently taken a huge hit there and in Vietnam, Singapore and Malaysia.

For a beleaguered world tourism industry already hurting from sluggish economies in wealthy nations and the war in Iraq, this is more bad news. Qantas Airlines in Australia, for instance, will slash 1,400 jobs due to these problems.

This could, in turn, hurt Asia's struggling economy, which is slowly working its way out of a recession in the late 1990s, the prime minister of Thailand warned Tuesday.

The same day, Huw McKay, an economist at Australia's Westpac Bank, predicted SARS could damage southeast Asian growth rates by at least a percentage point.

So, southeast Asia is on the brink of an economic, social and biological crisis. Could it get any worse?

Sure. Throw in a few heated political disputes.

In Hong Kong, people are losing faith in the government.

Michael DeGolyer, a political scientist at Hong Kong Baptist University, described the situation.

"At the moment, people are not pulling together behind the government. People are pulling together with each other and behind the doctors and nurses who have put their lives on the line."

The situation in Taiwan would be laughable if it weren't so deadly serious. The WHO does not acknowledge Taiwan as a country (nobody does, except the United States). Thus, they refuse to send officials to monitor and help treat SARS cases.

In other words, Taiwan is being refused humanitarian assistance because of a petty political argument.

The worst of the political problems lies squarely on China's shoulders, though.

SARS first appeared in Guangdong last November, but China did not report it until February.

Even then, Beijing underreported cases until international pressure compelled them to tell the full truth. They are currently cooperating, but it may be too late.

A WHO representative, David Heymann, told a Senate committee that if the Chinese had asked for help in November, SARS could have been controlled by now. Instead, it is growing despite China's claims to the contrary.

Worse, experts still don't know exactly what SARS is, how it was spread to humans, where it came from or how to treat it.

To this point, bureaucratic incompetency, political spats and communist pride have hampered prevention efforts and made this situation worse than it should be.

The only way to solve the problem and the damage done already is for southeast Asian governments to start working together with the rest of the world to combat it.

Stereotyping eliminates true knowledge of individuals' personalities

Have you ever been stereotyped? Be it by your gender, skin color, clothing style or nationality, the feeling of being stereotyped is crushing. It's like you've been judged before you've been allowed to shine. People think they know you before they even skim the surface of your character.

We've all heard or said oh-so-common phrases criticizing football players' and cheerleaders' intelligence or lack thereof.

I'm sure everyone's probably either called in or snickered at a Forum comment calling all frat boys and sorority girls spoiled, alcoholic rich kids who have to buy their friends. Anyone who dresses in black and has multiple piercings is obviously a greasy stoner who is worthless and will never amount to anything. Long hair and silver jewelry is always indicative of a witch. All young black males are criminals, and anyone who wears a cowboy hat or boots is an inbred hick who's dumber than a rock.

Anyone who believes any of this is deserving of a swift kick to the head.

People aren't made from cookie cutters. Every person is unique and has their own values and personality, regardless of their clothing or social status. Many would surprise you if you only took the chance to get to know them. It is unfortunate that some people actually believe stereotypes, a fact that only widens the rift between us all, but the situations where typecasts cause the worst damage is when it is between races.

The barriers of ignorance and fear cause a white woman to clutch her purse tighter when a young, black male is near, even if he is dressed "respectably." If a white person disapproves of the amount of noise a black person is making, often times it is automatically assumed "it's because they're black," and not just because they were making a lot of noise.

It is in these scenarios that we too quickly stereotype and accuse. Feelings are hurt and new labels are assigned to people. Understandably, a hard life where these situations tend to be the norm can lead to accepting biases as true, but stereotyping by race is one of the biggest barriers for improving black and white relations and taking steps to see each other as humans rather than colors.

People need to stop taking things so personally and learn to live unassumingly.

This past week was End Discrimination Week, dedicated to the end of discrimination for all race, gender or sexual preference, or any issues people felt oppressed about. The main event was "The Writing on the Wall," in which people could go out to a wall and write anything that made them feel exploited on it, and then the wall was torn down on Thursday as a symbol for tearing down the walls of hatred and oppression.

To take this dream to a reality, we all need to think twice before we decide who someone is. Go out on a limb and make the effort to get to know someone before you judge them. Take a step outside yourself and into the other person's shoes. It will do you good and help make your world a nicer place.

Poll suggests concerns about war linger

By Will Lester
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The American public is growing more optimistic about the war in Iraq, but seven in 10 say it's too early to tell if the war has been won.

Just over half, 51 percent, said they believed it was necessary for coalition forces to kill or capture Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein in order to win the war, according to a poll released Thursday by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press. Bush administration officials say they don't know what has happened to Saddam, despite the bombing this week of a home where he was thought to be meeting with other Iraqi leaders.

"There's growing optimism, but people realize the end game is going to be difficult," said Andrew Kohut, director of the Pew Research Center. "And they want to see Saddam before they're comfortable that the war is over."

About three-fourths, or 73 percent, said they believed it would be difficult to install a stable democratic government in the country.

The number of people who thought the war was going very well reached about six in 10 this week as the public saw pictures of cheering crowds in Baghdad greeting American troops. That number has doubled since late March when U.S. forces were running into heavy resistance in central Iraq.

Opinion remained mixed on what should happen next.

By a 2-1 margin, people said the United Nations should play a significant role in postwar Iraq. More Democrats than Republicans said so — by 72 percent to 57 percent. Half of Democrats said the U.N. should have the most influence in establishing an Iraqi government, while a third of Republicans felt that way. A majority of Republicans, 58 percent, said the United States should have the leading role.

The biggest concern about what comes next in Iraq was the high cost of the war, with two-thirds saying they were worried about that.

The number of people who thought President Bush made the right decision to go to war has risen to 76 percent. And about that many, 74 percent, said they approved of the job Bush was doing as president.

Most people, 63 percent, said they thought the war against Iraq would help, not hurt, in the struggle against terrorism, while 22 percent disagreed. People were less convinced that it would help in the search for peace between Israel and the Palestinians, with the biggest number, 40 percent, saying it would have no effect.

The poll of 809 adults was conducted Tuesday and Wednesday and had an error margin of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Child protection legislation recently approved by House

By Jesse J. Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House on Thursday approved a package of child protection legislation that would create a national Amber Alert child kidnapping notification network and strengthen the nation's child pornography laws.

The House voted 400-25 for a compromise crafted by a House-Senate negotiating committee that would institute the national child kidnapping network urged by the family of Elizabeth Smart.

The Smart family, reunited with Elizabeth last month after she had been taken from her bedroom in a Salt Lake City suburb months ago, has called repeatedly for Congress to pass the legislation.

The bill's fate in the Senate is uncertain. Some Democrats, who support the stand-alone Amber Alert bill passed by the Senate, have objected to provisions in the compromise that they say would take away federal judges' discretion in sentencing criminals.

Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota accused Republicans of "kidnapping the Amber Alert bill in an attempt to achieve partisan and wholly unrelated goals gutting judicial sentencing guidelines."

But House Judiciary Chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., called the measure "the most important and far-reaching child protection legislation in the past 20 years."

"The overarching goal of this comprehensive package is to stop those who prey on children before they can harm children," he said.

The legislation also strengthens the nation's child pornography laws, increases penalties for child sexual predators and reduces federal judges' discretion in sentencing criminals.

Track Miami bound

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thursday's postponement of the water-logged Masters Tournament proves just how important weather can be in sporting events.

Coach Cliff Rovelto didn't need the reminder, though.

Two weeks into the outdoor track season, his team is ditching the on-again, off-again Kansas weather for Miami's sunny beaches, competing in Saturday's Gatorade Classic.

"Because of the weather here, some events can't work outdoors," Rovelto said.

"They have yet to be able to practice outside. For example, planting a pole in a cement box is different outdoors."

The team also has suffered setbacks due to delays in construction of the new track. So far, high jumpers, long jumpers, triple jumpers and pole vaulters have been restricted to indoor work.

While they have done a good job staying consistent in their training, Rovelto said, the weekend meets are the only chance such athletes have to catch a breath of fresh air. While the mechanics of the sport remain the same, competing outdoors cannot be simulated.

"How much working indoors affects people varies from individual to individual," Rovelto said. "But it does make a difference. Vault is probably the worst. Carrying the pole and jumping into the wind is impossible to replicate."

Don't look for such early difficulties to impact the Cats' chances of repeating as Big 12 champions, though. At this point in the season, athletes are engaged in a strict training regimen.

This year, the NCAA changed its qualification rules, forcing athletes to compete at a regional in order to go to nationals. Now more emphasis must be put on being ready on that certain day, rather than being consistent throughout the season.

That change has forced the Wildcats' to modify their training and competition techniques in 2003.

"In terms of winning events, getting marks and places, those take care of themselves," Rovelto said. "We are now more concentrated with the preparation of athletes and making sure they gain the necessary experience before the end of the season."

Regardless of the time the Cats have to work outdoors, the competition they encounter in Miami should prove adequate, Rovelto said.

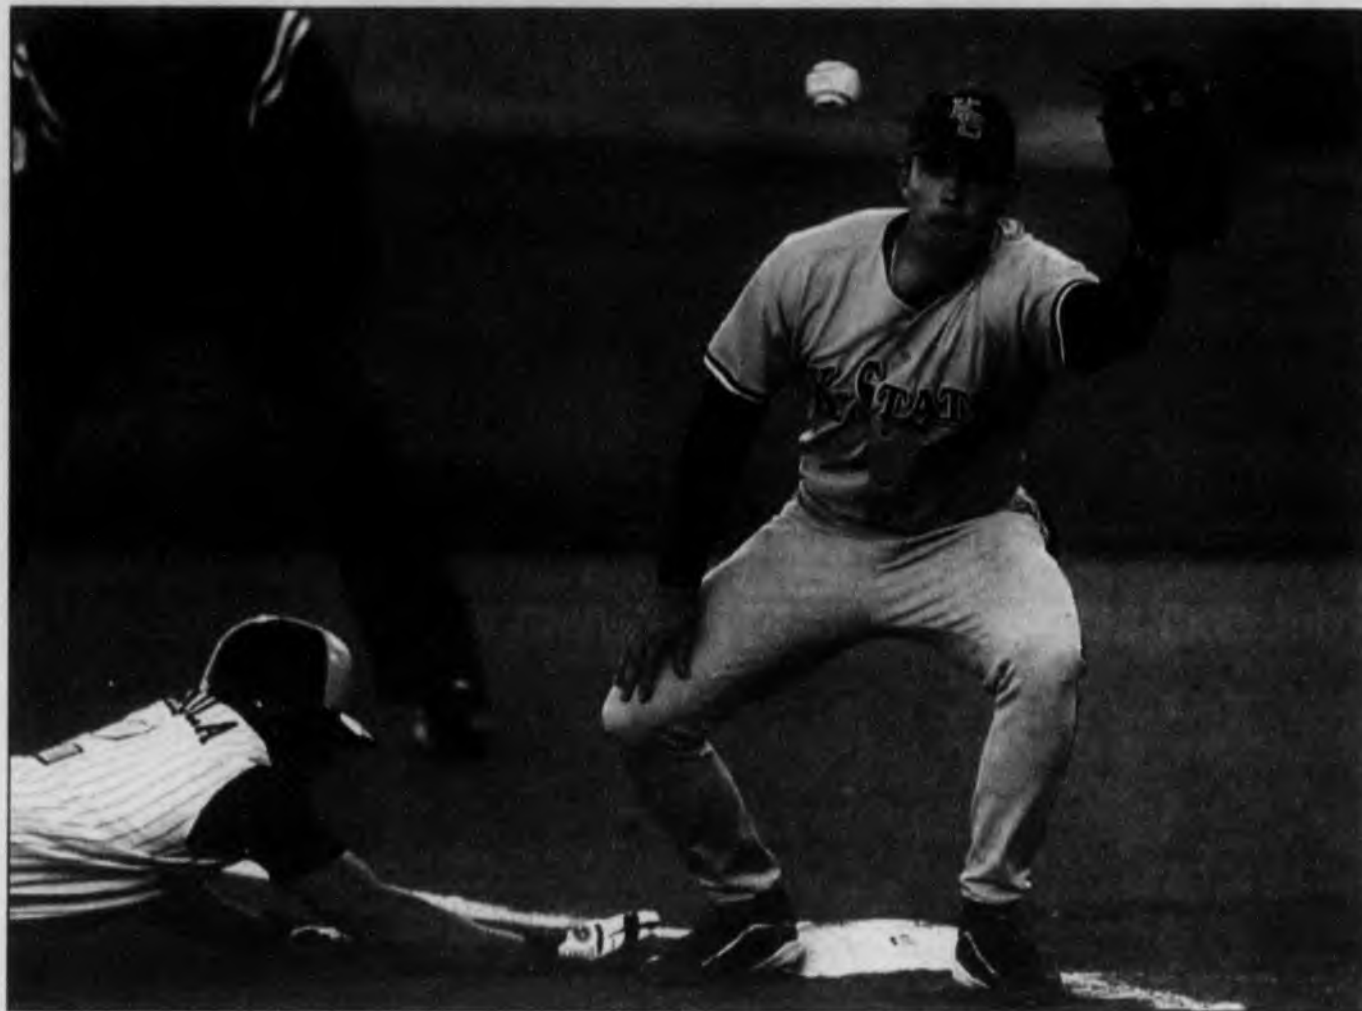

Nine schools will compete, including Connecticut, Maryland, K-State and five Florida schools.

"It is not a meet that has been in existence for a great length of time," Rovelto said, "but it will be decent competition. At this time in our schedule that's exactly what we need."

Cat baseball looking for 1st win in 19 days

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Basking in 70-degree weather at Tointon Family Stadium on Thursday, Coach Mike Clark said it's time for his team to enjoy baseball again.

"We have to throw strikes, move the ball around offensively, get our bunts down, do our hit-and-runs, take advantage of situations that they give us and we have to have some fun," he said.

"Don't get me wrong," Clark said. "We're all disappointed with what's going wrong as far as losing games. But when you come out to the baseball field it has got to be the best part of the day."

The Wildcats (10-20, 0-9), fresh off Wednesday's night loss to Wichita State — marking number 12 in a losing streak that dates back to March 23 — play No. 17/19 Texas A&M (26-11, 7-5) this weekend in a three-game series.

The Aggies lost to No. 1 Rice on Tuesday but have won five of their last eight games and boast series victories over Big 12 foes Baylor and Oklahoma during that stretch.

"I love playing Texas A&M," Clark said. "Mark Johnson's teams are always fun to play because they challenge you and they really play the game the way it's supposed to be played."

"I'm excited because I think this is a challenge our guys need. If we can go out and play good this weekend, we can really get things going as far as the rest of the season's concerned."

Wildcat center fielder Brad Anzman, batting .263 with two doubles and two triples on the year, said K-State is more than capable of getting things turned around against A&M.

"We just have to play how we know how to play," he said. "You can't dwell on the past. You have to step it up for A&M, obviously. They're a good ballclub and a quality program."

Third baseman Ty Soto rifles a ball to first base to complete an out during Wednesday night's game against Wichita State. K-State will be back in action tonight against Texas A&M.

K-State is going to need pitching to compete at its highest level. The Wildcats have scored 13 runs in their last four games, but K-State has allowed 45 runs.

Texas A&M has been winning games by staying close to opponents with solid pitching. In the Aggies' series victory over Baylor, A&M's staff allowed a total of 14 runs to cross in three games.

In their conference win over Oklahoma, the Aggies allowed just 11 runs.

K-State will start junior transfer Jim Ripley against Texas A&M on Saturday. The junior transfer is 2-3 and ranks second on the team in strikeouts with 27.

Clark said K-State chances against the Aggies will depend heavily on the success of Ripley, coupled with Saturday's scheduled starter Kevin Melcher (0-3), and Sunday's starter, to be announced after Saturday's matchup.

"We've got to get it on the bump," Clark said. "We've really been talking to them about being aggressive and going after it. We're telling them that if they hit it hard, heck with it, next batter, and go after it."

"We just have gotten so passive and so tentative in our pitching. We're going to speed the game up, we're going to go fast, we're going to get after it, and we're going to get the rhythm of the game going."

Wildcat first baseman Tim Doty, who leads the team in home runs (8) and batting average (.371), said K-State's luck is bound to change.

"It's tough to pin it on just one thing because there's been so many things that have gone wrong during this streak," Doty said. "But it's got to break sometime."

College basketball | Roy at UNC on hold

Roy Williams and North Carolina will talk through the weekend about his interest in returning to the program where he learned to coach under Dean Smith.

Tar Heels athletic director Dick Baddour said Thursday the Kansas coach wasn't yet ready to make a decision after two days of discussions.

It was unclear whether Williams was leaning toward staying with the Jayhawks or returning to North Carolina, where he was an assistant under Smith for a decade.

Williams, who spoke with reporters briefly outside Allen Fieldhouse on Thursday, said he won't again speak with North Carolina officials until Sunday.

Olympics | Iverson, O'Neal to join team

Allen Iverson and Jermaine O'Neal will be asked to join the 2004 U.S. Olympic men's basketball team, a source told the Associated Press on Thursday.

The decision was made in a conference call among members of the USA Basketball selection committee, a basketball source with knowledge of the selections said on condition of anonymity.

WNBA | Predraft tryout canceled

The WNBA canceled its predraft tryout camp Thursday because of stalled labor negotiations that also threaten the league's draft and even the entire season.

The league's four-year contract with its players' association expired in September, and talks for a new deal began in November. On Tuesday, the NBA Board of Governors said it would cancel the WNBA season if there isn't a contract by April 18.

Ohio tournament to serve as final test for men's golf before Big 12 championships

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tim Norris has been here before.

As a player at Fresno State in 1980, Coach Norris competed in an NCAA Championship at the Ohio State Scarlet course in Columbus, Ohio. And he couldn't have done much better, finishing fifth.

Norris said the 7,251-yard Ohio State Scarlet course is the next in a tough line of courses the Cats have to play.

"It will be difficult," he said. "I played in an NCAA Championship there back in 1980, and obviously Ohio is a big golf state — the birth place of Jack Nicklaus. I think our players will be really impressed with the place and all the tradition at Ohio State."

"That's one of the reasons we wanted to go," Norris said. "It's a difficult golf course. It's pretty fair. There are no trick holes or blind holes. Most of the Big Ten will be there, so I know the course will be set up difficult. We play on a hard golf course every day, so these guys know the value of par."

The Robert Kepler Invitational begins with 36 holes Saturday starting at 8:30 a.m. and the final 18 holes will begin 8 a.m. on Sunday. It will be the final test for K-State before heading to Southern Hills Golf Club in Tulsa, Okla., for the Big 12 Championships.

"We just have to try and get a little bit better," Norris said. "That's all I've said to them. They've done all the work. As the season has gone on, they've gotten a little bit better, and that's what we're looking for at this tournament as well."

Norris said in the upcoming weeks, carding par will be K-State's primary goal.

"If you track our results, we do much better when the scores aren't exceedingly low," he said. "Par is going to be a good score there, par is going to be a good score when we go to Southern Hills, and I know if we're lucky to advance to nationals, par is going to be a good score there."

K-State has been searching for consistency all season and may have found it in the past few weeks, finishing in the top five in two of its last three tournaments. Norris said consistency is always the key to success in college golf.

"It's the difference between the great teams, the good teams and the average teams," he said. "We're going to need more of that consistency, and we're going to need a couple of hot rounds. We haven't had those yet, but those will come. You can't force those."

"We've had some players that have had the chance, to post a really low round, but it hasn't quite worked out. It's all part of just trying to get a little bit better."

Norris will send juniors Aaron Watkins, Greg Douglas and A.J. Elgert, along with freshman Josh Persons and sophomore Matt Van Cleave to Columbus this weekend.

"It will be another good test of competition on a great golf course," Norris said. "I'm excited about this trip, and I think our players are, too."

ANSWERING THE CALL

Mystery plot in 'Phone Booth' lacks depth, remains captivating

Short and sweet. It's a nice deviation from the norm to sit down to a movie, then be standing up and stretching out in well under two hours — one hour and 20 minutes, to be exact.

Then again, when nine-tenths of the action takes place in a phone booth, an epic-length film probably is not the best thing to shoot for.

Joel Schumacher's "Phone Booth" is strikingly simple and straightforward. Edgy and suspenseful, the film also ventures into a small examination of the importance of sincerity and honesty.

Colin Farrell ("Daredevil") stars as Stu, a self-absorbed, rude, arrogant New York City publicist who talks big but isn't as important as he would like to believe. Though happily married, he is pursuing a young aspiring actress, Pam (Katie Holmes, TV's "Dawson's Creek"). He calls her every day from the same phone booth.

One day, after hanging up the phone, it immediately rings again. Stu answers and finds himself talking to a mysterious caller who

"PHONE BOOTH"

Movie review by Wendy Gorman somehow knows a great many details about his life.

The caller (voiced by Kiefer Sutherland, "Desert Saints") has a rifle aimed at Stu and is determined to keep Stu on the line.

For Stu, the psychopath deems it necessary that he confess to his wife that he is interested in another woman. Things get hairy when the caller shoots an angry New Yorker trying to get Stu out of the phone booth. Police and tourists are convinced Stu is the killer.

For the rest of the movie, Stu finds the lives of all the people in the street in his hands as the caller makes demands and threatens to kill the people who come into contact with Stu.

All this time, Stu can't leave the phone booth or let anybody come too close to him.

"Phone Booth" is fast-paced and easy to watch. The cinematography is excellent, and picture-in-picture is used to show the actions of different people simultaneously.

Farrell more or less carries the movie, metamorphosing from the slick, haughty publicist to a very scared and humble human being quickly and believably. Sutherland plays a critical role by providing the caller with a creepy and manic voice.

Dry humor throughout the movie balances out its edginess nicely. The caller in particular tosses in periodic wisecracks that highlight the suspenseful moments.

However, the film has little intellectual depth. Police Capt. Ramey (Forest Whitaker, "Panic Room") does some investigation into the phone call, but the search aspect is underdeveloped.

The film also leaves the perplexing question of how the caller got all his information on Stu.

Some of the details the sniper knew obviously were not ones Stu would have disclosed to Pam over the phone.

Journalist recollects personal wild life in 'Kingdom of Fear'

Amid the porn stars, presidents and Hells Angels, journalist Hunter

Thompson has lived quite a life, and a good portion of it is recorded in his memoirs, the five-star "Kingdom of Fear: Loathsome Secrets of a Star-Crossed Child in the Final Days of the American Century."

Thompson, best known for "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," also covered Richard Nixon's 1972 campaign tour and romped with the notorious Hells Angels motorcycle gang.

"Kingdom of Fear" does two things.

Like any other autobiography, the book is Thompson's life as told in humorous narratives — for both posterity and to eliminate bias — old dispatches are included from Thompson's hometown paper.

Thompson also has included some of his less famous works, such as "Fear and Loathing in Elko" and "Song of the Sausage Creature."

"Fear and Loathing in Elko," a short story originally published in "Rolling Stone Magazine" during the early '90s, is a recollection of a story involving Clarence Thomas and a blow-up doll.

"Song of the Sausage Creature" was a story written for "Cycle World," in which Thompson defines what it means to be a Café Racer.

According to the book, "A thoroughbred Café Racer will ride all night through a fog storm in freeway traffic to put himself into what somebody told him was the ugliest and tightest diminishing-radius loop turn since Genghis Khan invented the corkscrew."

The "Song of the Sausage Creature" is what one of these Café Racers hears after they wipe out.

"Kingdom of Fear" also is a testament to Thompson's friends in high places and cultural demi-god status.

He mentions when "60 Minutes" correspondent Ed Bradley fleeced him out of a few thousand dollars while betting on college basketball.

There was a transcript from the correspondence between Thompson and his mini-me, Johnny Depp, following the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Once, in a case of mistaken intentions, Thompson was nearly arrested for leaving a half-frozen elk heart on the door and detonating bombs near the home of friend Jack Nicholson.

I don't know about other fans of the old Doc, but I tend to get a little bored when Thompson rambles about his days as a foreign correspondent.

Despite being slow at times, "Kingdom of Fear" succeeds in shedding light on the life of the man whose credence is, "It never got weird enough for me."

Book review by Tony Herrman

British rock bands invade America

If the U.S. government really wanted to protect American jobs from immigrants, they would limit the number of imported British rock bands.

Ever since the Beatles and the Stones invaded our shores, hundreds of bands have crossed the Atlantic to annihilate their American counterparts.

Two new British groups, the Music and the Coral, haven't defeated the colonists yet, but their debut CDs are like bayonets pointed at the hearts of American radio programmers.

While the bombs of the most popular and bombastic American bands are bursting in air, the songs of the younger British bands are killing us softly.

Critics have either championed or chastised recent Brit-rock groups like Coldplay for aping Radiohead. The Music sounds more like the Verve or the Stone Roses, with their psychedelic guitar swirls and their sour, haunting vocals.

However, the Music sounds like itself, a powerful, young band that plays the type of singable anthems Radiohead or any other great rock band should. Drenched in distortion, rainy with reverb, the songs on the Music's self-titled debut rock.

The Music is not a great band yet, as some of the songs bleed into one another. Or else the band is bloody amazing, as the album is a tone poem like "Dark Side of the Moon." Either way, the Music certainly is good, and it deserves an American audience bigger than Robbie Williams'.

The Coral doesn't sound like Radiohead or the Stone Roses. This band sounds like Pink Floyd of the Syd Barrett era.

Songs like "Spanish Main," "Shadows Fall" and "Simon Diamond" shine on like crazy diamonds, complete with the whimsical imagery and wit that Americans have never quite mastered. Also, the harmonies are wicked.

What makes the Coral's eponymous debut exciting, and what also might doom it to American oblivion, is its genre-blurring between and within songs.

None of these labels fit the Coral, much less do the band justice, and if I were to say I hear echoes of the Doors, Jefferson Airplane and the Beatles (the Coral also hails from Liverpool), you might think the band sucked or is somehow derivative, which is certainly not true.

Like the Music, the Coral sounds like itself, although it wears its influences like a heart on a sleeve.

As in the 1970s or the 1960s, the British are coming. You have a choice: You can listen to these new bands gallantly streaming or listen to Limp Bizkit violently screaming.

"It is spread though people within close proximity to each other or by handling objects that have been touched by someone that is infected," Reppert said.

SARS originated in China and is most widespread in areas including Hong Kong, Vietnam and Singapore.

There are now several treatments, but they continue to be tested to evaluate their effectiveness.

"There has been a tremendous amount of work done and information learned in the last three weeks, but there are still many unknowns," Reppert said.

Despite the warnings, there is still at least one group of K-State students is planning on making a summer trip to Asia.

Julie Kurr, junior in elementary education, said the leaders of their group have been in close contact with the officials in the city they will be traveling to.

"So far, SARS hasn't been detected in the area where we will be," Kurr said.

For now, the group plans to continue with its trip as scheduled, but there are still concerns among students and their families.

Reppert said people in the community should be reassured that SARS does not seem to be spreading and is not a great threat in the United States right now.

"Only about 3 percent of recognized cases have been fatal, and most of the cases have been identified as people over the age of 25," he said.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene, along with Center for Disease Control officials, said she recommends people avoid traveling to China and the surrounding areas unless it is essential.

If students or faculty are planning on traveling overseas, Lafene offers a Foreign Travel Clinic that gives students information on health issues including certain precautions to take and vaccinations they need before traveling out of the country, Kennedy said.

"This service is not just for students traveling to Asia, but is always available to any student or faculty member traveling abroad," Kennedy said.

more concerned with the safety of the donor and receiver of blood. Their policies they make are not purposefully discriminatory by any means — they just have to keep in mind this is life and death."

Hope Rabi, registered nurse and team supervisor for the blood drive, said about 5 to 15 percent of donors are deferred from donating blood.

"People can be deferred indefinitely, and some can be deferred for 12 months. It just depends on why they were deferred," she said.

McFall said traveling to certain regions, having anemia and using illegal IV drugs are among the many reasons why someone may be prohibited. He said he can't donate blood for one year after traveling to Belize.

"The idea is to give your blood to someone else, so they have to keep in mind certain risk factors that make the blood different than other blood," he said.

McFall said excluding donors at the donation site can help limit the risk of contaminating the blood supply. Although the American Red Cross tests the blood for diseases like HIV and AIDS, McFall said the tests aren't always 100 percent accurate.

"The last thing you would want is for something to slip through the system and affect somebody else's life forever," he said. "They're trying to limit as much of a risk as they can from the beginning. To do so, they have to identify risk factors and assess that."

Rabi said there is a safeguard if donors are uncomfortable answering initial questions honestly. She said donors can use two stickers — one to verify the blood is suitable for use, and the other verifying its incompatibility.

"We have a safeguard built in called confident unit exclusion. We leave when they put the stickers on the appropriate forms, so it's completely confidential," she said. "We have to depend on our donors being honest."

However, not all people are honest when completing their medical histories.

Danny Callahan, graduate student, said he has gay friends who have lied on the form.

"They think it's wrong and just lie about it and donate anyway," he said. "They have been tested and go ahead and lie because they want to help."

Callahan said he thinks the question is outdated since more information is available about AIDS.

"To me, it's a question that comes from the 1970s or something — before they even knew what was going on," he said. "Today, we know that anybody can get it. If they're going to ask that question, it should be straight across the board — 'have you been sexually active?' If they are going to discriminate against one, why not discriminate against everybody?"

Powell said he hasn't tried to donate blood since being deferred in 1985. He said until that time, the question hadn't pertained to him.

"My answer became yes, and it changed everything," he said. "That kind of exclusion at that time kind of drove me away, and I haven't attempted to donate since."

Although Powell is frustrated with the stipulation, he said he understands the reasoning for it.

"I consider myself a realist, and I realize that AIDS is a life-threatening epidemic," he said. "I realize precautions need to be taken to ensure that the virus isn't passed unknowingly, but it's discouraging in the fact that they so easily and quickly wrote off an entire population of people, but I realize that they are doing what they think is right to ensure the safety of the rest of the population."

WAR | Kurdish forces celebrate after reaching Iraq capital city gates

Waltemeyer, commander of a special forces unit in northern Iraq, said forces would enter the northern city of Mosul "in a matter of hours or days." Gen. Babakir Zibari, a Kurdish commander, said remnants of Saddam's Baath party and Iraqi military commanders in Mosul had offered to surrender on condition that the U.S.-led bombing stopped and they received amnesty.

But Waltemeyer said, "I'm not here to make deals."

Kurdish forces, which have battled Saddam for years, triggered celebrations in Kirkuk when they reached the city, an ancestral home and gateway to Iraq's northern oilfields.

In a scene reminiscent of downtown Baghdad a day earlier, joyous residents toppled a statue of the Iraqi leader, then stomped it and hit it with their shoes.

Cars and trucks laden with Kurdish fighters drove through the city, flying the flags of the two major Kurdish political parties that rule the region — yellow for Kurdistan Democratic Party and green for the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan.

Local residents cheered the passing Kurdish forces and pelted them with roses.

To the southeast, Kurdish peshmerga forces also moved into the city of Khaneqin near the border with Iran.

Pfc. Patrick Miller found alive, well after being held as POW by Iraqi military

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARK CITY, Kan. — Army Pfc. Patrick Miller was among seven U.S. soldiers found alive in Iraq by Marines, the Pentagon said Sunday.

Miller, 23, was captured when his 507th Maintenance Company was ambushed March 23 near Nasiriyah. The Pentagon confirmed that Miller was among the seven released to Marines.

The Rev. Ron Pracht said Miller's wife, Jessa, received a call from the military early Sunday confirming that Miller was among those found.

"I'm relieved. I'm celebrating without question," said Pracht, pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church in nearby Wichita. "I'm so excited for Jessa and the kids."

Pracht married the couple shortly before Miller's deployment and has been acting as a spokesman for the family since Miller was captured. Jessa Miller has declined all interviews since her husband was captured.

Jessa Miller and the couple's two children — 4-year-old Tyler and 7-month-old Makenzie — moved from Texas, where Patrick Miller was based at Fort Bliss, to Park City to be closer to family after he was sent overseas in December.

The seven were taken by helicopter to this base near Kut and flown to a military airport south of Kuwait City.

They "are in good shape," although two have gunshot wounds, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said.

Marines search Iraqi villages

By Calvin Woodward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Seven missing U.S. soldiers tasted freedom again Sunday, released by their captors into the care of American troops advancing on the hometown of the vanished — and perhaps dead — Saddam Hussein. Marines met little resistance entering the city of Tikrit.

Three weeks after Iraqis seized them, and put some on TV, the seven were escorted to a Marine unit by a leaderless group of Iraqi soldiers who had given up the fight. It was a jubilant turn for the prisoners' aching families at home and all those who had practically given up hope.

Farther up the road was Tikrit, breached by Americans without the battle once expected in that redoubt of Saddam loyalists. Indeed, U.S. war leaders said they knew of no more hostile Iraqi strongholds to overrun.

Even before Tikrit could be declared under control, Gen. Tommy Franks, the war commander, said the time had come to double back to towns skipped on the race to Baghdad and other strategic locations.

"We have simply bypassed villages and towns and so forth," he said. "And now we will go to each and every one of them, and be sure that we don't have some last, small stronghold in that country."

Franks said he expects to travel to Baghdad within a week "with a very small staff for the purpose of seeing my people" in a low-key meeting.

U.S. officials said forensics experts had samples of Saddam's DNA and would try to find a match from bodies recovered in the bomb and missile attacks most likely to have killed him.

And on the war's other deep puzzle, the location of any Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, U.S. forces reported they held a variety of Iraqi officials, including a half brother of Saddam, who might have useful information.

Other figures from the Saddam era have certainly escaped into Syria on Iraq's western border, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said.

And President Bush said that must not continue. "They just need to cooperate," he said.

Syria's deputy ambassador to the United States, Imad Moustapha, denied his country was taking in Iraqis and said it was America's job to monitor Iraq's western border.

Joshua Paul Kahler, senior in philosophy and biology, died Thursday from a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

The incident occurred on U.S. Highway 77 near Junction City. Kahler was transported to Geary County Hospital where he died.

According to obituary information, Kahler graduated from Rockhurst High School in Kansas City, Mo., and loved to ski, travel and play Monopoly. Donations are being directed to Manhattan Habitat for Humanity where Kahler served as president.

He is survived by his parents, five sisters and two brothers, all of Shawnee Mission, Kan.

The Department of Philosophy will have a support session at 3:30 p.m. today in Dickens 203 with representatives from University Counseling Services.

A campus memorial is expected to be scheduled at a later date, according to a K-State media relations press release.

Earthball game played to benefit local Head Start students

It was a beautiful day to be crushed by a 5-foot-6-inch giant ball.

Earthball 2003, sponsored by Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and Delta Chi fraternity, took place Sunday morning at Memorial Stadium to raise money for their philanthropy, Head Start.

"The money we raise will go to Head Start, which is a free preschool for young children," Allyson Hills, sophomore in public relations, said. "The money will help buy new books and other important things they need, such as gloves, shoes and academic materials. So far we have raised $1,700 in donations."

Earthball is a game played between two teams in which the goal is to push a giant ball, between 5 feet and 5-foot-6-inches tall and wide, across the opponent's end lines. Each game is composed of two halves, each half being six minutes long. One point is rewarded for each score.

Out of the seven competing sororities, two-time defending champions Gamma Phi Beta, team No. 1, beat Gamma Phi Beta, team No. 2.

"We take pride in our win," Lindsay Gatterman, junior in speech pathology, said. "The more we played, the shorter the other players got, so it was easier as we went along. Our strategy — win."

Gamma Phi Beta had some advantages when it came to the game, Suzanne Blakely, junior in management information systems, said.

"It's vicious out there, but we had an advantage because our team was so tall," Blakely said. "We had players with

Caravan of cars traveling with rapper Snoop Dogg shot at in Los Angeles area

LOS ANGELES - Three gunmen shot at a convoy of cars last Thursday night, one of which was carrying Snoop Dogg. The rapper wasn't hit but one of his bodyguards was injured.

Police said the shooting happened in the Mid-City area as up to five cars, including one carrying Snoop Dogg, were traveling through the area. Another car pulled alongside the convoy and three men with guns began shooting, said police Officer Don Cox, a police spokesman. Bullets hit two of the vehicles.

The wounded man, an off-duty police officer with the Inglewood Unified School District, was shot in the back, police Sgt. Brian Owen said. The man, whose identity was not immediately available, was taken to a hospital and released early Friday, Owen said. It was unclear whether he was in the same vehicle as Snoop Dogg.

Owen said it appears that one of the shooters wanted to speak with the rapper, whose real name is Calvin Broadus. Words were exchanged, followed by gunfire. It wasn't immediately known what was said.

No arrests have been made. The rap star's entourage included seven bodyguards, five from the Inglewood school district and two state parole officers, Owen said.

Police questioned Snoop Dogg, the bodyguards and other people who were with him. Owen said he didn't expect them to be booked for a crime.

Police investigating Osborne fight

LOS ANGELES - Police say they are investigating an alleged fight between reality TV star Sharon Osbourne and a Hollywood agent.

Osbourne, rocker husband Ozzy and their son, Jack, were dining at Koi Japanese restaurant when the alleged fracas occurred last Thursday evening, police Sgt. John Pasquariello said Friday. The other woman allegedly involved was Renee Tab of the talent agency ICM.

Sharon Osbourne "started with spitting on her and calling her names," said Tab's attorney, Nejila K. Brent.

Osbourne spokeswoman Lisa Vega issued a statement saying her client had been "viciously assaulted" and was treated at a hospital for injuries. In an interview, she refused to characterize the injuries.

If any charges are filed, they will be "on the low end of the misdemeanor scale," Pasquariello said. Tab and Osbourne have been at odds since January over whether the agent belonged at an Osbourne party where she won the door prize, a $15,000 necklace.

Griffith, Banderas go Broadway

NEW YORK - Melanie Griffith is joining her husband, Antonio Banderas, on Broadway.

While Banderas plays a woman-obsessed film director in "Nine," Griffith will be portraying show-biz floozy Roxie Hart in the long-running revival of "Chicago."

Griffith, star of movies such as "Working Girl" and

"Crazy in Alabama," will join the cast of "Chicago," now in its seventh year on Broadway, on July 11. She is scheduled to appear through Sept. 28.

Banderas opened to generally positive reviews Thursday in "Nine," a revival of the 1982 musical by Maury Yeston and Arthur Kopit. The actor is scheduled to stay in the show through Aug. 10, although an extension is possible.

50 Cent concert questioned

OXFORD, Ohio - City manager Jane Howington asked Miami University to cancel an April 23 concert by rapper 50 Cent because of public safety concerns, but the school says the show will go on.

The concert is sold out, and tickets only could be obtained with Miami University student identification, university spokeswoman Holly Wissing said Friday.

"We're not expecting any problems," Wissing said. Campus police and officials say no tickets will be sold at the door, alcohol won't be allowed and there will be adequate security.

Howington is concerned that violence could develop if fans come from other cities and find that no tickets are available.

In an April 2 letter to Miami President James Garland, Howington said she sees the potential for a "public safety nightmare."

"This event is putting the entire community at risk, an action that I most vehemently oppose," Howington wrote. "If any problems occur, Miami will be accountable in answering to the community, the student body and their parents."

50 Cent's platinum-selling debut album, "Get Rich or Die Tryin'," is filled with dark, sometimes humorous rhymes about gangsta life. He grew up in a gritty New York neighborhood where he hustled crack, has been shot nine times and is involved in a fierce rap rivalry with Ja Rule and his Murder Inc. crew.

Blowfish donate funds to charity

CHARLESTON, S.C. - Rock group Hootie & the Blowfish have donated $66,000 to a program that provides adults with computer skills, draws parents into schools and helps children read.

Two band members, Mark Bryan and Dean Felber, joined state Superintendent Inez Tenenbaum to announce the gift Thursday.

"We hope our donation sends a message out there so more people get behind this," Bryan said.

Family learning centers provide free computer lessons to adults, such as how to use a spreadsheet, while their children use computers to hone their reading skills. After completing the course graduates receive a refurbished computer.

The program at four centers opened last year with a grant from the U.S. Education Department. The money from the Hootie & the Blowfish Foundation, coupled with a $15,000 grant from the city of Charleston and other donations, will keep the program running this year.

Local event supports troops

By April Middleton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan community sent a message of support and appreciation to Fort Riley soldiers and their families this weekend.

The community-wide effort was organized by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce to let the soldiers know that their dedication and self-sacrifice are appreciated.

Several businesses offered discounts to military personnel and their families, and also displayed banners that said "We Support Our Troops" and flags across town.

John Armbrust, vice president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said this was the first time the Chamber has organized this focused of an effort since Desert Storm, during which time similar community-wide efforts were planned.

He said there were two reasons this was a priority for the Chamber and its members.

"Some of the families and the troops that are deployed live in Manhattan. They are part of the community, and we try to provide support to the community," Armbrust said.

"Secondly, Fort Riley is important in lots of ways to the fabric of this community. We want to recognize that as often as we can."

Armbrust said he hoped that the publicity the weekend received in advance would encourage many people to take advantage of the opportunities and activities.

He said even businesses that didn't have time to organize discounts or other events donated money or materials so the city could display banners of support and yellow ribbons. Additionally, a few churches provided free day care service to military families, he said.

"People want to help in any way that they can," Armbrust said. "Many organizations are helping in various and important ways."

Sunset Zoo offered half-price admission to military personnel and their families on Saturday and Sunday.

As of Sunday afternoon, Chantel Green, guest services, said about 470 people had taken advantage of the military discount.

"We were hoping for a good show," she said. "But this was more than we expected, so we are very happy to have been a part of all of this."

Manhattan Town Center was one of the many businesses in town that offered special discounts with a valid military ID this weekend.

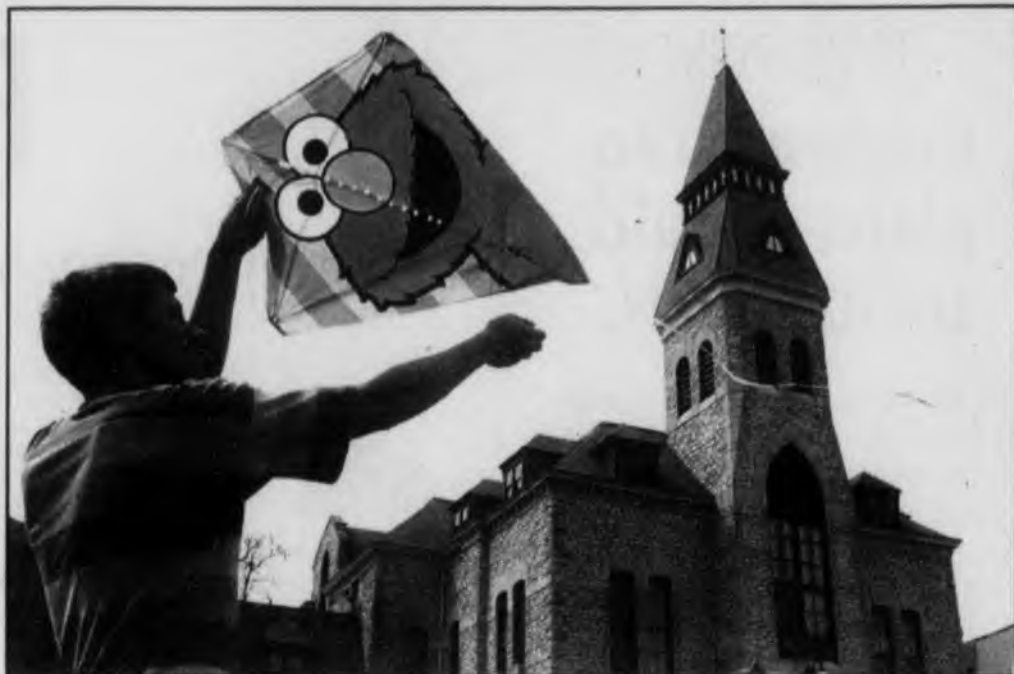

Randy Crow, marketing director, said the Town Center became involved not only because it was the right thing to do, but also because it was an extension of the center's mission, which is to be the center of community life.

He said the majority of stores offered discounts. In addition, free pictures with the Easter Bunny were offered and KBLS-FM Sunny 102.5 did a live remote and handed out red, white and blue ribbons.

Crow said the Chamber did a good job of organizing and promoting the weekend's events.

"It's really been a community-wide effort, which is gratifying to be a part of," he said. "It's neat to see posters across town and a joined message of support to the troops and their families."

Native, international students mix cultures

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Get ready to expand your horizons.

Today kicks off K-State's annual International Week, which is sponsored by the International Coordinating Council.

Maria Beebe, program coordinator, said the week is a good way for K-State students to become more aware of the diversity on campus, while giving international students a chance to share their cultures with others.

One opportunity to see international students sharing their cultures is the International Cultural Exhibition from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. The exhibition will showcase art and textiles among other items from cultures around the world.

Beebe said K-State has had an International Week during the past decade, although the event has evolved quite a bit.

"It's evolving by the fact that we have experience in knowing what will and won't work," she said. "The talent show gets bigger every year, and we seem to have a larger attendance each year at the bigger events."

Monica Pirozi, graduate student and coordinator of International Week, said all the work that goes into the event is done by volunteers.

Pirozi said the goal of the event is an important one.

"The main thing is to improve the international culture awareness here on campus," Pirozi said. "One good thing about being at a university with such a diversity of cultures is the opportunity to know about the other cultures."

Pirozi, who is from Brazil, also said since the activities during the week have a social format, they offer an opportunity to meet and talk one-on-one with people of different cultures.

"It's a good thing to know

Looting, unrest continues in Baghdad

By Niko Price
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq - At first they cheered, smiled, offered hearty thumbs-ups to the U.S. soldiers newly in their midst. But across Iraq's lawless capital, that sentiment is evaporating as quickly as Saddam Hussein's government melted away.

Baghdad was bursting with anti-American feeling Saturday as residents saw their city being stripped by its own citizens while U.S. forces stood by.

Some still agreed with the United States' assessment of it, self as a liberator. In the middle-class Zayuna neighborhood, friendly people offered American Marines baths, bread and buoyant greetings.

But for other Iraqis, in dozens of interviews conducted across Baghdad, the assessment was drastically different: America as conqueror.

U.S. forces reopened the Al-Rasheed and the Al-Jumhuriya bridges across the Tigris River dividing the city, and looters swarmed across. They pushed into several government buildings, including the Planning Ministry.

Along with looting, fighting continued in the Iraqi capital: A U.S. Marine was shot and killed at the checkpoint he was guarding by a man carrying Syrian identification, and a fire-fight erupted Saturday evening outside the Palestine Hotel, where many journalists are based. Marines took cover behind trees from heavy machine gun fire.

To walk the streets Saturday was to wade through a crazy-quilt blend of disarray and sadness, rage and jubilation and self-hatred.

U.S. forces say they are doing the best they can under chaotic conditions - chaos, many Iraqis point out, that the United States itself created. Few praised Saddam. But at least, they said, he offered stability.

Baghdad lacks that right now. Water, electricity and gasoline are pipe dreams, and food is becoming almost as scarce.

TO THE POINT Postwar Iraq plans should include U.N.

As the war in Iraq seems to near its end, it is time to rebuild – a job for the United Nations.

The U.N. is an organization in which world viewpoints can be taken into consideration and what the United States, a single nation with a single opinion, wants to do with Iraq might not be the best for the Middle East region.

The U.N. also has the valuable resources of Iraq's neighboring nations. These nations have a much better idea of what government structure would be successful in a Muslim, developing country. Other nations, too, might have important input to offer.

Although the U.N. has lost credibility in the eyes of American officials, the US is viewed as a conqueror in the other nations. Because of this animosity, any government plan the US has for Iraq will not be as easily accepted by the region as one the U.N. develops.

US officials' goal should be to create a peaceful nation and Middle East region, regardless of which nations were involved in the war.

The fact that the US started the war without U.N. approval does not mean it should not consider allowing for U.N. input when rebuilding Iraq.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The only reason all the Iraqis are cheering after we invaded Baghdad is because now they can come to America.

Words of wisdom for today: Don't fart in front of other girls and then laugh about it.

It's about time the college newspaper printed a recipe for making a drink with 24 ounces of alcohol. Binge drinking is a great thing.

I'm sitting here, looking at a Cheeto, and it reminds me of my penis — the lumps on it.

OK, let's not joke ourselves. It also reminds me of the size.

I'd rather be defecating a tire than listening to one more lecture from my teacher. Go Cats.

I would like to say that I'm not a hick, and I'm still a racist.

Hey, if John O'Hara went to a football game and got on the Jumbotron, would they change the name to a Dumbotron?

I think bisexual people are greedy.

Hey, Chris Shank. Can you say "Pervis Pasco"?

Do you really honestly think that K-State men's basketball has the number one recruiting class in the nation? Get real.

I can never really tell if I'm attractive or not. Could someone please tell me?

I think Angel Wilson is a great writer.

I think it's wrong that so many cars are driving around braless.

RECORD HIGHS

Ignoring environmental problems only increases their effects

FLETCHER JACOBS

Harvard scientists reported last week that the Middle Ages were much hotter than today. So much hotter, that these dire predictions of "global warming" and "record breaking" temperatures are out of place in the context of history. They based their study on 240 temperature proxy records and believe that a Little Ice Age that occurred sometime after 1300 cooled Earth for a few centuries. Thus, the current warming of the globe is not due to the burning of fossil fuels or other engines of capitalism, but is simply a natural cycle as we return to higher temperatures of the past.

My first thought on hearing all of this was, "how about those armored knights?" Lugging those big old suits of armor would be tough enough. But doing it on a hot day similar to August in Kansas? Laying siege to a castle or hauling up some tower to save a princess in that heat? Talk about being ready for Miller Time when you got off work.

I hadn't even finished wondering if Robin Hood really wore tights or just a nice pair of cotton shorts when the conservative right wing chimed in. The great scientific mind of Rush Limbaugh weighed in by saying, "I told you so." For him, it was a vindication for not signing the Kyoto Treaty to cut carbon emission levels. Conservatives see that signing akin to allowing socialists to run the country.

Dr. Limbaugh reminded everyone that there were no SUVs in the Middle Ages. And it was hot. So SUVs aren't the only causes of rising temperatures. To borrow from a Middle Age movie, oh Doctor, who are you who are so wise in the ways of science?

Dr. Limbaugh warns that these anti-capitalism, liberal scientists are dangerous because they find a result and then disregard any facts that disagree with that result. Of course, one could argue that is how his entire radio show is run, but that is another column.

I hate to question the good doctor and his vindication claims, but this isn't new. Scientists have long wondered how much natural cycles and a possible Ice Age play into warming trends.

The study is right to question the practice of putting current data against past data to make the increase look even more dramatic. Past data relies on tree rings, ice cores and historical samples. These data sources are incomplete, and scientists have to make assumptions with them. Thus, we can get different interpretations from different scientists. Comparing these records to the highly advanced temperature readings and data we have since the late 1800s is, as one professor told me, comparing apples to oranges.

But let us get down to the real issue. Temperatures are rising. That is no argument. The issue is what is causing this warming. Is it natural as part of a cycle of warming up from the ice age, or are there human-induced variables? Or, more likely, is it a combination of both?

What this really boils down to is an issue of risk mitigation. A professor gave me a parable to illustrate this. If you are driving your car to Topeka and run into a fog bank, what do you do? There is a chance you might not hit anything, but who knows? Do you keep going pedal to the metal? Or do you slow down and use caution? A bit simplistic, but it gets the point across. Do you take your chances or err on the side of caution?

It is pretty obvious that natural effects have a role in our current warming, but to discount what humans are doing to the earth is foolish. The Kyoto Treaty isn't the end of capitalism. It tries to lower the risk of a problem that most scientists believe is occurring.

Of course, we won't suffer the most if you look at predicated global warming models. Less developed countries without the technology to cope nearer the equator will be hurt the most. Too bad they also don't make any greenhouse gases. But hey, we don't see those effects except on television. And I can always change the channel.

The U.S. government has basically said we won't do anything with Kyoto for several more years until we have more research. In a case like global climate change, we won't know with 100 percent certainty if humans play a role until it is too late. Until then, the left and right will argue, call each other names and belittle each other's scientific data.

And we all sit around like the movie "Jaws" continually ignoring this particular problem until it swims up and bites us in the ass.

Students embrace diversity in campus events, celebrate last day of End Discrimination Week

ANGEL WILSON

Got discrimination? Hope not. Last week, the campus celebrated End Discrimination Week. It was sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, the KSU Student Chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America and Union Program Council.

It was an initiative sparked by the University of Utah's "The Writing on the Wall Project," started in October 2001. According to the project's Web site, it began with the school's Human Issues Education Committee. The creator and author of "The Writing on the Wall Project" concept, LaDon Reader, assistant director of residential living, approached the committee. "Through the act of literally constructing a cinder block wall – representing our oppression of others – and bringing down this structure, participants in this event are reminded of the need to act personally and experience the power that collaboration can create positive change for the future."

Throughout the week, there were numerous programs and activities. A half-page ad about hateful language appeared in this newspaper last week. With phrases like "ghetto," "gypped" and "nigger-rigged," it was not only intended to shock, but also to illustrate the power of words we use in our everyday language.

K-State welcomed the fabulous Preacher Moss on Tuesday evening in Forum Hall. While tastefully mixing humor and sarcasm, he successfully brought home the importance of recognizing and accepting our similarities.

Wednesday focused on the effects of Matthew Shepard's murder with HBO's "The Laramie Project." A group of 10 New Yorkers decided to take an in-depth look at the way Shepard's death affected his small Wyoming town. What was even more disheartening was the fact that although the people in the film were actors and actresses, the sentiments expressed were very real.

The highlight of the week was captured on Thursday evening. Students had decided to construct Manhattan's own wall project earlier in the week, and this was the day it was to be pulled down. The wall was located near the corner of Claflin Road and Manhattan Avenue in an empty lot across from Moore and Haymaker halls. A multitude of offensive, oppressive and derogatory words, phrases and slurs in an array of different colors prompted drivers to stare in awe at the cinder-blocked structure.

So with the sun just starting to set, a crowd of about 50 or more people anxiously anticipated the command they had been waiting for all week. After a couple of brief speeches, Tiffany Happer, the wall project's coordinator, began to count. Seven strategically placed ropes tightened inside a countless number of multi-hued fists. By the time "three" rolled off of Tiffany's lips, the wall was halfway near its demise.

As it hit the ground with a satisfying thud, cheers and applause thundered from the audience. A wall of hate had been effortlessly knocked down by our very own K-Staters.

End Discrimination Week was just one of several weeks that showcased the talent and determination of our students. Watching a group of young people become so passionate about such a dynamic cause showed not only maturity, but also confirmed the caliber of students we have attending K-State.

The implementation of acceptance and awareness into everyday thinking is the absolute essence to embracing diversity. And these students have done more than opened their arms to envelop that embrace. Way to go K-State – I am impressed.

Angel is a graduate student in college student personnel. You can e-mail her at angelw@k-state.edu.

Union seeks greed; Taco Bell decision leaves students short of food choices

Editor,

It looks like greed and money have won out again over student opinion.

I just read in the Collegian that Taco Bell's contract will not be renewed for the next school year, and that Eddie's Pepper, a Mexican restaurant with similar food and pricing, will replace it.

In the article, it stated that the main reason was because all revenue goes to the franchise owner of Taco Bell, while Eddie's Pepper revenue will go to the Union general fund.

This wouldn't be a big deal, except that Taco Bell is probably the most popular restaurant in the Food Court. It is very inexpensive, and judging by the lines every day, quite popular.

They even had the gall to try to put a pro-union spin on it. Eric Braun, Union dining director, was quoted as saying, "If we kept the same food, we would be unable to add versatility. People get bored with the same thing all the time. We want to keep things new and fresh and different."

It would seem to me that to add versatility, the best restaurant to go would be the sandwich shop next to Taco Bell. There is already a very popular sub shop downstairs in Subway, and the sandwich shop in the Food Court isn't very popular.

Also, replacing a Mexican restaurant with a Mexican restaurant doesn't seem to be very "fresh."

I understand that the Union wants to make a profit, and that some of that money would go to improve our Union, but this is obviously a decision based on money, not on what the students want.

I feel that this is not fair and as a regular patron of Taco Bell, will be very disappointed by its absence next semester.

Do the students a favor, Mr. Braun, and please don't take away our Taco Bell.

City commissioners, library board meets to discuss timing of budget

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Public Library officials and city commissioners are working to better correlate their budgets for the coming year.

Previously, the library budget has been planned in May, before the city's budget plan, making it difficult to coordinate.

"We are going to see a difference in the timing of the budget," Commissioner Mark Taussig said. "The library is going to look at adopting the budget after the city has begun the budget process so they will have an idea of the course the city is taking."

Fred Atchison, library director, said the delay in timing is not a problem.

"Delaying the planning 'til June gives us more time to do the work we need to do," he said.

Right now the library operates under a separate ordinance that allows the library board to set a budget that would require funds up to six mills (a mill is a dollar of tax against 1,000 dollars value of property) of property tax, said Helen Cooper, chairman of the library board of trustees.

The library's budget is funded 84 percent from the city, 5 percent from fines and fees, 5 percent from grants and state aid and 6 percent from gifts and endowments, Atchison said.

Taussig said the city pays about $1 million to the library through taxes. These dollars are distributed to employee salaries and various library materials, he said.

In addition, the use of the $1,085,913 in the library reserve fund has also been debated.

Initially, the fund was money set aside in case of an emergency, but now interest has collected and it has grown to one large sum, Taussig said.

Atchison said the library is going to prepare a plan that will show how those reserve funds will be used. He said the money will be used for various library projects including computer upgrades and collection expansions.

"Fortunately, those dollars are there because that is what is going to help us avoid reducing services," Atchison said.

He said the money needs to be worked with, and that is the decision that the library board will be making.

"An amount needs to be designated as a legitimate amount for emergency and the rest to reduce taxes for the city," Taussig said.

DNA to determine fate of Iraqi leader

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Gen. Tommy Franks disclosed Sunday that American authorities have DNA from Saddam Hussein and his sons, raising hopes that forensic experts can determine whether the Iraqi president was killed in U.S. strikes on government compounds.

Saddam's fate remains a mystery, even though his government collapsed last week. Franks, commander of the war effort that has displaced Saddam's government, said investigators are armed with a powerful tool that could identify even fragmentary remains.

Asked on CNN's "Late Edition" whether he had the DNA of Saddam Hussein and his sons, Franks said, "Of course; of course." He did not say how the DNA was obtained.

With that material, investigators would be able to positively identify Saddam "unless the remains were removed" from where he died, Franks said.

"What you should know is that we have the forensic capability to chase these things down, and we'll chase them down, every one of them, all the way," Franks said.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said he could not confirm Franks' comment, but

"I'm sure it's true if he said it."

"I heard that he said that," Rumsfeld said after an appearance on NBC's "Meet the Press." "I just happen not to know about it."

The opening salvo of the war on March 19 was aimed directly at Saddam and aides, including his sons. Cruise missiles and precision-guided bombs struck a compound near Baghdad where he was believed to have been sleeping.

On April 7, an American bomber struck a residential complex in Baghdad after U.S. intelligence agencies received information that Saddam, his sons and other top Iraqi leaders might have been meeting there, U.S. officials said.

"The appropriate people with the appropriate forensics are doing checks you would find appropriate in each of the places where we think we may have killed regime leadership," Franks said.

On MSNBC, Jim Wilkinson, spokesman for Franks' Central Command, agreed with his boss that DNA is available but said: "We can't tell you what form it's in. The Marines need to be secretive about these types of things."

The April 7 strike targeting the Iraqi leader used four 2,000-pound, bunker-penetrating bombs that demolished several buildings. At least two bodies were recovered.

Wrestlers go to national competition, place 9th

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's wrestling team recently got the chance to compete in the National Collegiate Wrestling Associate Championships.

The team beat out 20 other teams to take first at the Southwest Conference, which was hosted by K-State. This qualified the team to go to the NCWA National Championship in Easton, Pa. Ten men were individually qualified to participate.

There, the team took ninth place overall out of 47 teams, with one individual first place.

Dave Karnowski, senior in biology, placed first in the 285-pound weight class.

Other honorable mentions include Beau Tillman, who took fifth in the 133-pound weight class, and Steven Kern, who took fifth in the 165-pound weight class.

Karnowski said he wrestled four people to win his weight bracket, which had 16 men to begin with. He only weighed 235 at the time.

"I brought some skill to the weight class, whereas it's usually a strength competition," he said. "I held up in strength too — we've trained really well."

Even though the wrestlers are not recognized by K-State as an official coached team, its members believe they are nothing less than that.

"Instead of bringing equal funding to women's sports through Title IX of the Civil Rights Act, funding for men's sports were cut," Karnowski said. "It's basically wrestling's worst enemy."

Wrestling may be considered a club sport, but that's just a name, Karnowski said.

"They just call it that," he said. "We are actually a team."

The wrestling club receives some money from the Student Governing Association, Karnowski said.

"It's enough because wrestling is a pretty cheap sport to maintain," he said.

Karnowski said he believes that if K-State were to start an official team, it would be one of the better ones in the area.

"There is a lot of latent talent around this area," he said.

Money was donated to the school to fund a wrestling program, but it can't be touched until wrestling is a school-sponsored sport, Karnowski said.

"We'd love to get into some of that money," he said.

There are enough people involved to have a full team, said

Steven Kern, sophomore in mechanical engineering, who took fifth place overall.

"We need more experience," he said. "We need to do better at nationals — ninth is good, but we could do better."

The team cannot have a coach because then it would not have a place to practice, as the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex doesn't allow coached teams to practice there, Karnowski said.

"We go as a team and practice on our own," he said. "We get together about four times a week for a few hours."

Several people consider wrestling as second class because it's a club sport, Karnowski said.

"I don't think they realize the level of competition we're dealing with," he said. "It's pretty tough."

K-State catcher Ryan Baldwin tags out Texas A&M's Erik Schindewolf on Sunday during the Wildcats' loss to the Aggies at Frank Myers Field at Tointon Family Stadium. The loss marks K-State's 15th straight.

Wildcats swept by A&M; school-worst 15-game slide continues

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of two things was going to happen for K-State this weekend.

One, the Wildcats would take a game from No. 17 Texas A&M and avoid ownership of the longest losing streak in school history.

Or two, K-State could be swept by the Aggies, move to 10-23 overall and 0-12 in the Big 12, and shoulder the burden of history.

Unfortunately for K-State, the latter scenario materialized, as Texas A&M moved to 29-11 on the season and 10-5 in the conference after pounding the Wildcats 16-3 in the last of a three-game set on Sunday.

On Friday, behind second baseman Erik Schindewolf's two RBI, A&M handed K-State consecutive loss number 13, 6-4.

On Saturday, Texas A&M outfielders Justin Ruggiano and Scott Beerer both drove in four and hit a home run as the Aggies pushed K-State within one loss of 15 in a row, 12-7.

After losing two straight to A&M using starters Jim Ripley (2-4) and Kevin Melcher (0-4), K-State coach Mike Clark decided to try something different on Sunday.

"You only have so many bullets in your gun," he said.

"And the ones that are doing a decent job for you, you keep sending them out, and the ones that aren't, you don't. That's basically what it was going to come down to."

Clark opted to move to a different type of weapon Sunday. Eric Rollins, K-State's closer, made the start for the Wildcats in the last of the three-game set.

Rollins has been one of few highlights for K-State's struggling pitching staff in 2003. Coming into Sunday's contest, he was the only Wildcat pitcher with a winning record at 2-1 and boasted all three of K-State's saves on the season.

But closers are closers for a reason. And Rollins did what closers do — mow down the opposition, for two straight innings. But Texas A&M and Ruggiano proved to be too much for Rollins to hold off.

In the top of the third, Ruggiano crushed Rollins' 0-2 fastball into the trees beyond the wall in dead-away center. The three-run bomb gave A&M a 4-0 advantage.

The Aggies weren't done — not by a long shot. A&M added three more in the fourth before K-State came back with three in the bottom of the inning, but A&M responded with three more in the fifth.

Ruggiano then hit his second three-run jack of the day, again to center, to highlight a five-run A&M sixth.

When the dust settled at Frank Myers Field, the Aggies had earned themselves a sweep of K-State by way of a 16-3 series-fine blowout.

And the Wildcats had earned themselves the longest losing streak in school history.

The Wildcats threw four other pitchers — Andrew Ehling, Jonathan Gutierrez, Jared Bunn and Jared Brite — before the day was done.

K-State pitching was less than spectacular for the series. All told, Wildcat arms surrendered 34 runs on the weekend.

But K-State's bats weren't any more effective. The Wildcats scored just 14 runs. Designated hitter Ty So-to said runs are a necessity when a team is trying to come back.

"Sometimes, we need to just put the ball in play a little bit more," he said.

"Just let the ball find its way and let things happen. If you put the ball in play, good things will happen."

Wildcat first baseman Tim Doty said K-State's losing streak is just a part of the game all the Wildcats have committed themselves to.

"I had no idea this was going to happen," he said. "Coming into the season we had a lot of guys back and we figured we'd be able to play really well. But this is baseball and this is what happens."

Tough course produces mediocre results for men

Difficult tournament shows team needed improvements

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A difficult golf course can quickly show a golfer what he needs to work on.

K-State's men played on one of the toughest courses its played on this weekend at the Kepler Inter-collegiate at Ohio State's Scarlet Golf Course, and the course defined the Cats' weaknesses quickly.

"We just had a poor first round," Coach Tim Norris said. "The golf course was set up very, very difficult and we knew that going in. It just wasn't quite our best golf. But it comes at a good time, because it gives us a pretty good examination of what the guys need to do to get ready for the Big 12 Championships."

K-State finished with a 923 and was led by junior Aaron Watkins, who finished the tournament in 19th place. Watkins shot an even-par 72 in the final round, one of the best rounds of the day.

"Aaron played a great round of golf today," Norris said. "I'm sure that will be one of the top five scores today. Most of the Big Ten was there — teams that go there year after year, and for us to place respectively, felt pretty darn good."

Consistency again was a problem. Josh Persons and A.J. Elgert tied for 47th, each carding a 233.

Norris said several areas the need improvement.

"Everybody could have hit the ball better off the tee. When we go to Southern Hills, it's going to be just as tight. The rough won't be quite as long, but I know the greens will be smaller," he said.

"This course is pretty easy when you drive it in the fairway and then hit it on the green. It's hard to hit greens out of the rough and virtually impossible to get it close out of the rough."

Playing on their home course, the Ohio State Buckeyes won the tournament by four strokes over Illinois. Ohio State shot 302 in the final round Sunday to finish ahead of the field at 893.

Norris said playing the course gave the Cats valuable experience before heading to Tulsa, Okla., to play the very difficult Southern Hills golf course for the Big 12 Championships.

"You just have to pick and choose your spots as far as when to be aggressive," he said. "The greens were very difficult to putt and very subtle. We didn't putt as well as a team as we have. Just a very, very difficult setup."

Equestrian qualifies for nationals, sweeps events

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State equestrian continued its post-season march by sweeping the English and Western team events at the Zone 9 Championships last weekend.

The English team rolled to the IHSA National Championships by winning five of eight events and finishing with 48 points, eight better than Wisconsin and Purdue.

The Western team matched that feat less than 24 hours later, scoring 31 points and narrowly edging St. Mary's-of-the-Woods by two points.

This will mark the first time K-State has sent an equestrian team to nationals, which will be May 1-5 in Murfreesboro, Tenn.

"They did very well," Coach Lindsay Breidenthal said. "The girls are much more prepared and have more confidence now."

The Cats were paced in English by the first-place finishes of Summer Hamil, Natalie Bennett, Jenae Grossart, Anne Brammeier and Natalie Poholsky.

"We won five of eight events, which was very good," assistant coach Meghan Cunningham said. "It was our first experience riding other horses, so they handled the challenge very well."

The Western team was paced by Kristin Tanney, Lauren Allen and Katie Myers, each winning their division.

"Kristin Tanney rode very strong," Breidenthal said. "She deserved her win and I was very proud of her. Lauren and Katie both rode very well. As far as a coach picking those individuals as a team member, they made me feel very secure."

Championship performances weren't limited to the teams, however. Four riders advanced to nationals individually.

English riders Julie Hufft and Jessica Gittleman swept the top two spots in walk/trot/canter. Junior Brandi Vogel claimed first in open reining and second in open horsemanship, advancing in both disciplines. Elaine Cobb, second in intermediate, will join Vogel on the Western side.

Vogel won for the fifth time in reining this season and is attempting to defend K-State's first national championship, won last year at intermediate.

"She'll have a competitive advantage, but it's a whole different game," Breidenthal said. "She's in a much harder division."

While K-State managed to advance four of 11 individuals, the weekend could have been better. Four other riders placed third in their disciplines, missing a trip to nationals by just one place.

Cunningham said that should not overshadow the efforts of the teams, however.

"To have individuals advance is great, but our goal was to get the team to nationals," she said. "Our priority was towards qualifying as a team."

For Breidenthal and Cunningham, that means a successful weekend.

"Our outlook going into nationals is very positive and the excitement is high," Breidenthal said.

"You have to be a little cocky to win, and I think they had that."

MLB | Royals' streak over at 9
The Kansas City Royals lost for the first time this season, ending baseball's best start in 13 years, as Ricardo Rodriguez pitched the Cleveland Indians to a 6-1 win Sunday.

The Royals were the first club to start 9-0 since the 1990 Cincinnati Reds.

Kansas City was bidding to become the eighth team in history to open at 10-0, and first since the 1987 Milwaukee Brewers started with 13 straight wins.

Golf | Canadian Mike Weir wins Masters
Mike Weir became the first Canadian to win the Masters, making two clutch pars to force a playoff with Len Mattiace, and winning on the first extra hole with a simple tap-in for bogey in the first Masters playoff since 1990.

Tennis | Serena falls for 1st time this year
Serena Williams is capable of losing, and everyone on the WTA Tour can thank Justine Henin-Hardenne for reminding them.

The Belgian emphatically ended Williams' 21-0 start to the season by beating the world's No. 1 player 6-3, 6-4 Sunday for the Family Circle Cup title.

Williams' last loss came against another Belgian, Kim Clijsters, in the 2002 season-ending Tour Championship in November.

NASCAR | Gordon earns 1st win in 2003
Jeff Gordon nudged Bobby Labonte aside on the 487th lap Sunday, ending a long stretch of nose-to-tail frustration to win the Virginia 500.

Gordon had been dueling Labonte since they broke free on a restart with 48 laps to go, but Labonte blocked his efforts to pass on both the inside and outside before Gordon finally moved him out of the way.

The bump occurred as they entered the first turn, drawing a mixture of roars and boos from the crowd of 86,000. The race finished under caution, and Gordon earned his 62nd career Winston Cup victory and first this year.

MLB | Umpire leaves hospital
Umpire Jerry Layne left the hospital to be checked out by baseball's doctors on Sunday, a day after he was hit in the facemask by a pitch from Pedro Martinez. Layne was diagnosed with a cervical sprain. He was hospitalized overnight before flying to Arizona for further examination, Red Sox spokesman Kevin Shea said.

MLB | Player's relative released as POW
Texas Rangers catcher Todd Greene got an early wake-up call Sunday, and it came with welcome news: His wife's cousin was among the missing POWs released in Iraq.

Chief Warrant Officer Ronald D. Young Jr., 26, is an Apache helicopter pilot who was shot down in central Iraq on March 23. He was among seven POWs released Sunday by Iraqi troops.

Greene got word in a 5 a.m. phone call from his wife, Vanessa. As far as he knows, Young was in good health and spirits.

Olympics | USOC members looking for spots
U.S. Olympic Committee members began jockeying for position a day after a task force proposed the most sweeping changes in the group's history.

Recommendations included cutting 114 of the 123 spots on the board of directors and eliminating entirely the 21-member executive committee. The proposals were presented by an in-house panel created in February after three months of turmoil led to eight resignations and drew the ire of Congress.

Responses were positive after the proposals were announced Saturday, but the tone was decidedly different Sunday.

Running | Radcliffe breaks marathon mark
Paula Radcliffe shattered her world best by almost two minutes Sunday — the biggest single drop in two decades — to win a second straight London Marathon, finishing in 2 hours, 15 minutes, 25 seconds. Radcliffe never had competed at 26.2 miles until the 2002 London Marathon. Now she owns three of the four fastest women's times in history, after lowering the world best she set just six months ago in Chicago by 1:53.

PUZZLING ART

K-State artist Yui Udo greets and talks to people at the opening of her show, "Neat Batteries," on April 5. Her show will be on display at Urban Designs art gallery until April 26.

Artist's pieces reflect personal observations, inspirations

 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Her art may come from Japanese toy books and fashion magazines, but artist Yui Udo leaves interpretation of her paintings to the audience.

Udo's master's of fine art exhibit, "Neat Batteries," is displayed at Urban Designs art gallery until April 26.

"I take objects, things I like, then the viewer looks at them and makes their own decision about what the paintings are about," Udo, graduate student in fine arts, said.

Udo said one of her biggest inspirations is her boyfriend of five years, Ben Brantlund. Brantlund, a ceramicist, graduated from K-State last May.

"It has a lot of drawing qualities. I think a lot of time she's trying to trip up the audience," Brantlund said.

One of Udo's methods to let the viewer decide what each painting is about is the titles. Some of the titles Udo uses for her paintings are "a lot like my pencil," "inside the mouth of the famous person," "Roland Barthes as a 2 x 4" and "jeff crawling on her belly."

With her titles, Brantlund said Udo is trying to trip up the audience.

"I always title them later on. I just paint things I see in fashion magazines or Japanese toy books," Udo said.

"The title helps give each person a different perspective."

Deborah Minner, owner of Urban Designs, said she finds the titles confusing because it is difficult to tell what they mean.

"I find the titles a little baffling. No matter how many times you look at the painting and the title, you can't make the connection," Min-

"Every week I paint differently, I don't know why. I get different influences, like other contemporary artists, or I just paint things that are really different."

Yui Udo
 GRADUATE STUDENT IN FINE ARTS

ner said.

"I don't know if she likes the combinations of words or is just trying to make the viewer look at the painting more closely. They're very clever titles. I just don't understand the meaning."

Minner describes Udo's art as, "abstract paintings that are non-representational."

She said her favorite piece is "monkey on my anti-hero," one of the paintings in the window of the gallery. It's a painting of a pair of knees, and the top is black and the bottom is white.

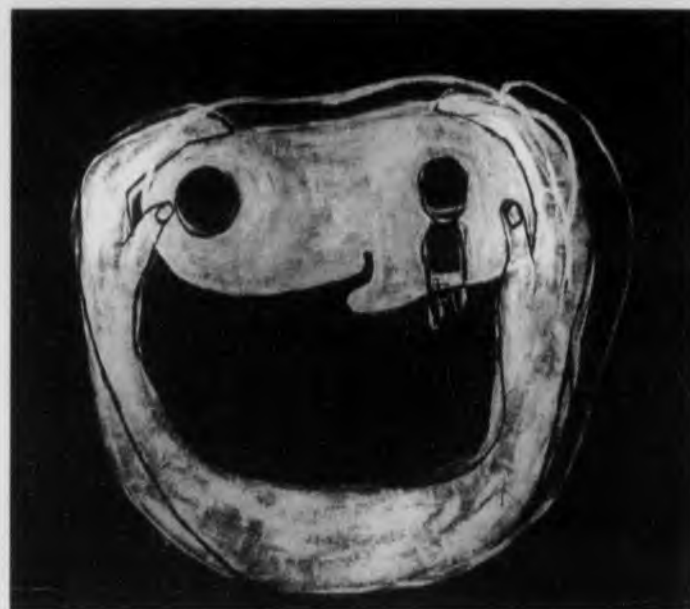

"I like the contrast and composition," Minner said.

A few of Udo's paintings use the same perspective of a pair of knees.

"(The paintings of the knees) come from some I did two years ago, of bunnies, stuffed animals. The legs were always in the bunny paintings. So I just took it," Udo said.

Udo's "monkey on my anti-hero" is part of her most recent crop of paintings, all black and white, which she painted just a few weeks before "Neat Batteries" opened.

"Every week I paint differently, I don't know why," she said. "I get different influences, like other contemporary artists, or I just paint things that are really different."

Good Vibes Festival entertains fans with 12 different bands

By JJ Duncan
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes everything goes right.

The weather was beautiful, the bands all started on time, and people actually showed up for the Good Vibes Festival on Saturday. The show raised $269 for the United Way Crisis Center for victims of family violence and sexual abuse.

The only real hitch was trying to gate the stage area and get everyone to donate for the cause, Damon Bailey, event organizer, said.

"The turnout was awesome, and we were really grateful for all the fans that came out," he said. "I just wish we had a better way of collecting donations. The people who did donate were awesome, but I don't think enough people knew where to donate."

Though it was Bailey's first time organizing and promoting such an event, he said he was pleased with the results and plans to do it again within the next year.

Sponsored by Manhattan businesses such as Zotic, Radina's and Wildside, the event boasted a roster of 12 bands from Manhattan, Lawrence, and Kansas City, Mo., that brought a diverse mix of fans into the April sun.

When the show-closers, Full Feature, came out to perform, lead singer/rapper Eddie Schubert, called for the crowd to give it up for "mother nature."

Besides enjoying the music, people scattered around the area with frisbees, hacky sacks, hula hoops and sunblock.

Ordinary Women made itself part of the event as well with an information booth and a display of its Clothesline Project, which consists of T-shirts hanging on a clothesline with various messages painted on each one.

Ordinary Women president Hayley Cherveny, junior in dance and psychology, said the project is meant to be a means for a therapeutic expression for anyone who has been through sexual abuse.

"It allows them to express what they need to get out without having to do it verbally," she said. "It also helps show the community how serious the problem is."

Cherveny said the organization was there to raise awareness for its upcoming Take Back the Night March, which will be at 8 p.m. April 25. The march will go from the plaza of the K-State Student Union to City Park.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES

By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled...or have already failed...you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight...or loses weight...the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.

2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating - how often and at what times during the day - causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.

3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

surgery and chemotherapy.

His leg was amputated to help defeat the cancer, and he was declared cancer-free only three weeks ago.

"He's my hero," Jenkins said. "He's a great inspiration to a lot of people."

The Special Olympics is the world's largest program of year-round sports training, education and competition for children and adults with disabilities, according to a press release.

Debbie De Venuto, northeast area director, said the Special Olympics strive to offer opportunities for people with disabilities to become involved in athletics. But the most important aspect of the event is not competition, but participation, she said.

Jenkins said she has seen the importance of participation during her son's involvement with the Special Olympics. She said all the athletes have positive attitudes, no matter whether they win their event.

"These kids don't know what failure is," Jenkins said. "You never see a tear on their face."

Eunice Kennedy Shriver began the Special Olympics as a backyard day camp. President John Kennedy's sister was mentally retarded, De Venuto said, and Shriver wanted an opportunity for her to become involved.

The Special Olympics have since grown to include participation in 160 countries, including divisions for males and females, age groups and ability levels, De Venuto said.

Physical fitness is a critical emphasis of the program, De Venuto said, but the interaction with other athletes makes the program vital at the local level.

Tonia Martin, Glenn's coach and local coordinator for the Junior Blues team, said her love of the athletes is what has kept her involved with the Special Olympics.

"It's a great thing to watch their faces when they get their awards," she said.

Glenn was all smiles when he had his two gold medals placed around his neck.

After winning two events Saturday, Glenn will begin preparations for the state competition in June in Wichita.

Jenkins said the competition and involvement has been invaluable to her son's development.

Glenn not only swims, but also is involved with Special Olympics track and field and basketball.

"It's a win-win game," Jenkins said. "You don't lose. Everyone's cheering him on — they're all winners."

Jenkins said the Special Olympics have played a huge role in Glenn's self-esteem.

Perhaps echoing his mother's sentiments, Glenn said he likes swimming and, after his coach asked what else he liked, pointed to himself.

"It's important that they have someone that can relate to their frustrations," De Venuto said, "and to their joys."

After his capture, video footage on Iraqi TV showed Miller answering questions in a shaky voice, his eyes darting back and forth between an interviewer and another person who couldn't be seen on camera.

Asked why he came to Iraq, he replied, "I come to fix broke stuff."

Bob Franken of CNN, who was with the Marine 24th Expeditionary Unit, which found the seven missing soldiers, said they were brought to an airfield in ambulances and all ran or walked to a C-130 transport plane.

Two of the POWs walked with a limp, and one was a woman, Franken said.

Miller was with a convoy of the 507th Maintenance Company that was ambushed and was among five POWs later shown on Iraqi television.

Pfc. Jessica Lynch, who was rescued from an Iraqi hospital earlier this month and returned to the United States on Saturday, was in the same convoy. Several others who had been with them were killed.

Miller's brother, Shane

Parker, said from his home in nearby Valley Center, that he heard about the POWs from his mother.

"I've been crying most of the morning," Parker told CNN.

"I'm just so happy," Parker said he had been avoiding television since his brother was captured and that he was looking forward to seeing him in person.

"It really upsets me to see Pat on TV. I didn't want to upset myself more than I already was," Parker said. "I just want to see him now. I can't quit crying."

Delta Upsilon won for the second year in a row shutting out Fiji, 4-0.

eyelid for the team.

"I got bruised and knocked on my butt, so it was pretty tough out there and tiring," Gibson said. "It looked easy, but it wasn't. I would have much rather been playing golf."

Though the ball is difficult to control, Gibson said certain things kept the team in focus and able to manipulate the ball.

"Teamwork and coordination were needed," he said. "As long as you had strategy, it wasn't that bad, and we couldn't treat every team as an easy opponent. We had to treat each team as real competitors."

Maneuvering the large ball left some players flat on the ground.

"Once the ball is going one way, it was certainly hard to stop," said Paul Ramlow, sophomore in electrical engineering and Sigma Chi member.

"You had to run your whole body into it and put everything you had to stop the ball."

Gatterman said it was a good time despite the aggressiveness.

"It was a really good game and a fun time," she said.

"We weren't pulling hair, but we sure were pushing each other."

VILLAGES | Iraqis share information with soldiers

Franks said Iraqis were coming forward in great numbers to tell soldiers where to find Saddam loyalists, arms caches and leads on chemical, biological and nuclear-weapons programs.

One example of cooperation stood out above all others Sunday — the delivery of the seven POWs into U.S. hands.

Capt. David Romley said Marines were met by Iraqi soldiers north of Samarra who approached the 3rd Light Armored Reconnaissance Company and had the Americans with them, bedraggled in their prison garb.

Two helicopter pilots and five members of the 507th Maintenance Company convoy who were ambushed March 23 and shown on Iraqi television walked — or ran — into a transport plane for a flight to Kuwait.

Two had gunshot wounds, Franks said. They were found a day after Pvt. Jessica Lynch, their POW comrade rescued in a commando raid, returned to the United States for further treatment of her many injuries.

Major combat ends with Tikrit

Hometown of Saddam Hussein falls to U.S. forces

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit fell with unexpectedly light resistance Monday, the last Iraqi city to succumb to overpowering U.S.-led ground and air forces. A senior Pentagon general said large combat engagements are likely over in the 26-day war.

As fighting wound down, Pentagon officials disclosed plans to pull two aircraft carriers from the Persian Gulf. At the same time, Iraqi power brokers looked ahead to discussions on a postwar government at a U.S.-arranged meeting set for Tuesday.

"I would anticipate that the major combat engagements are over," Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal told reporters at the Pentagon. Tikrit fell with no sign of the ferocious last stand by Saddam loyalists that some military planners had feared the last remaining Iraqi population center to succumb.

Secretary of State Colin Powell hinted at economic or diplomatic sanctions against Syria, saying the government is developing a weapons of mass destruction program and helping Iraqis flee the dying regime. Syrian officials denied the charges.

Looting eased in Baghdad after days of plundering at government buildings, hospitals and an antiquities museum, and group of religious and civil opposition leaders met in the capital to plan efforts at renewing power, water, security and other vital services.

American forces found prodigious amounts of Iraqi weaponry, French-made missiles and Russian anti-tank rocket launchers among them. And Army troops discovered thousands of microfilm cartridges and hundreds of paper files inside a Baath Party enclave as the dead regime began yielding its secrets.

In Tikrit, about 90 miles north of Baghdad, "There was less resistance than we anticipated," Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks told reporters, as American ground troops moved into the city after days of punishing air strikes.

American forces captured a key Tigris River bridge in the heart of town and seized the presidential palace without a fight as they rolled past abandoned Iraqi military equipment.

No-call list continues collections

Businesses attempting to adjust to new law

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas' no-call list, which prohibits certain types of telemarketing calls, has produced $127,500 from court settlement agreements since January.

Attorney General Phill Kline's office reported that $97,500 was collected in March. Only one lawsuit has been filed since the law took effect, but many complaints have been settled outside of court, said Whitney Watson, director of communication for the attorney general's office.

Sears Home Improvement Center Inc. in Longwood, Fla., paid $50,000 for 26 violations.

Willy Medina, spokesman for Sears, said the violations occurred during 11 days last October. He said the company always checks phone numbers against a national database, but he said he was not aware that Kansas maintained its own database.

Sears signed an assurance of voluntary compliance, which says the company will obey the law in the future, Medina said.

The no-call list — on which there are more than 480,000 Kansans — is proving to be a problem for industry, Medina said.

"It's a relatively new thing," he said. "You certainly don't want to upset the customers you are trying to win over."

Because the no-call list is relatively new, Medina said, there will be some problems getting a system established to ensure telemarketers will not call the phone numbers on the no-call list.

"There's a learning curve there," he said. "Once our system is in place, I think it will begin to improve."

In Manhattan, Josh Salmans, an agent for State Farm Insurance Co., said the list has complicated his ability to contact possible customers.

"It's harder because it takes more time," he said. "Before, if you wanted a list of 100 phone numbers, you called 100 phone numbers. Now you might have to enter 300 before you get 100 that you're allowed to call."

Salmans said he understands that many people might not want to be contacted by telemarketers, but he said he thinks some might be missing opportunities.

"They could be paying too much for their insurance," Salmans said, "but we can't contact them if they're on the list."

State Farm has a no-call list and a no-mail list, Salmans said. Before contacting a potential customer, his office first must enter the phone number or address into State Farm's database to ensure it is not off limits to solicitation.

Watson said companies that Students find freedom in apartments

By Mako Shores
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not everyone can live among pins, needles and threads.

Kendal Goodheart, senior in apparel design, can, and she's definitely used to it.

Goodheart shares a three-bedroom, two-bath Chase Manhattan apartment with her two roommates.

Pictures in designer frames aligned on a shelf, a sack filled with scraps of fabric and a sewing machine take up a majority of space on her desk.

With all her items, Goodheart is taking advantage of all the extra space she now has, compared to her former residence hall room.

"I like having my own space because I tend to be kind of messy," she said. "I have more room now, and be-

During her first year at K-State, Goodheart lived in Goodnow Hall and said she can recall what it was like when she moved in.

"I remember the first day in the dorms," she said. "It was like being at camp and the RAs were the camp counselors."

Students see effects of drunk-driving firsthand

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most students have had some experience with driving drunk. Many have experienced the dangers firsthand, and many more have been witness to friends injured or even killed by drunk drivers.

The Farm Bureau Association and Rebecca Thrasher, resident assistant for the 6th floor of Moore Hall, allowed students to experience what it's like to drive under the influence Monday evening.

The demonstration, called Fatal Vision, had students wear goggles that altered their vision to simulate the effects of alcohol. The students drove golf carts provided by the Manhattan Country Club and tried to walk a line of tape on the sidewalk while wearing the goggles.

"The goggles simulate a blood-alcohol level of about .17 to 2.0, which is where a lot of college students are when they are partying on the weekends," said Marieta Hauser, Kansas Farm Bureau Safety Coordinator.

Lithuanian leader relies on toilet-papering mystic's advice

Recently, many Lithuanians, whose country is poised to join the European Union next year, were cringing at the insistence by President Rolandas Paksas to continue to rely for advice on local mystic Lena Lolisvili. Among Lolisvili's methods for healing people: She wraps them in toilet paper, which she believes God has energized for her.

Top of the news

Lawsuits were filed in Chicago in February and in Hangzhou, China, in January demanding that theaters stop showing advertisements (not just the previews) that run past a movie's announced starting time.

Lawyers Mark Weinberg and Zhang Yang charged the theaters with fraud because of the three- to four-minute ad blitzes they endured recently after they had been expecting the films to get underway.

The Chicago lawyer demanded a refund plus $75 in damages; the lawyer in China demanded a refund plus the equivalent of $4.50.

Eve Ensler's play "The Vagina Monologues" (a series of explicit speeches on sexuality and repression) was performed at a hotel in Islamabad, Pakistan, in March, by Ensler and a troupe of local actresses (bundled in their traditional clothing) to an invited audience of 150, who apparently loved it, according to a report in Toronto's Globe and Mail.

"If (the play) can happen here, it can happen anywhere," said Hibaaq Osman, a Somali Muslim activist, who in a fit of enthusiasm renamed the capital city "Vaginabad."
"Having these Pakistani women talking about vibrators (is) what it's all about."

Fetishes on parade

And in February, a motorist reported as 40ish and balding stopped on the campus of Missouri Western State College in St. Joseph, grabbed a passing female student's arm, licked it, and quickly drove off.

Trendy surname

Larry Ray Pratt, 48, became the first person charged under Kansas' new food-supply safety law after he was arrested in January for allegedly urinating on packages of chicken in the walk-in freezer at a Dillon grocery store in Olathe.

And in Bennington, Vt., in December, Lori T. Pratt, 30, was charged with shooting her husband after she found a pornographic video under the couple's bed.

Also, News of the Weird readers will recall a November story on Kelli Pratt, 45, who was arrested in Modesto, Calif., after allegedly viciously biting her husband's scrotum in a fit of anger at his refusal to have sex with her, bites that caused an infection from which he died six days later.

Recurring theme

News of the Weird reported in September on a San Antonio lawyer called for jury duty but who told the judge that he'd serve only if the court paid him his regular rate of $100 an hour (He of course changed his mind when the judge directly ordered him to come in.).

In January, Charlotte, N.C., physician Charles Ferree similarly rejected his jury-duty notice, telling the judge his patients came first and that if any patient died (or even suffered) while he was on jury duty, the judge would be deemed responsible.

Ferree also threatened to judge any cases he had quickly and harshly and made fun of judges' relatively lax hours (compared to those of harried physicians).

Educators out of control

New York City P.S. 192 principal Evelyn Peralta-Tessitore (an anti-alcohol crusader) was charged with DUI after police spotted her at 2:30 p.m. on a February day, alongside a Bronx road, standing by her car, urinating.

And Mary Ann Swisler, a part-time professor at Seton Hall University (South Orange, N.J.), was fired after she responded to negative student course reviews with an e-mail calling most of her students "mental midgets" and the most "homophobic, sexist, racist, lying sacks of (word represented as 's t' in a news story) I have ever met in my life."

Our civilization in decline

In January, at a scout camp (for ages 11 to 14) in Denmark, organizers established a game of tag in which kids were the Jews (wearing Stars of David) and the adults pursuing them were designated as Nazis; one scout official admitted later that the game "may have crossed the line."

And in February, during the international debate on whether the forcible disarmament of Iraq needed the moral sanction of the United Nations, the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights in Bosnia accused many of the U.N. peacekeepers in the region of the enthusiastic off-duty patronization of sex slaves and child prostitutes.

The district of calamity

A 43-year-old man was murdered at 9 a.m. Jan. 31 at a gas station on a busy street in Washington, D.C., to utter indifference by a fellow gas-pumper, who (according to the surveillance tape) stared at the body, finished pumping and drove off.

A 911 call on a fatal house fire Jan. 6 in Washington was not picked up for several minutes (as many as 40, said some residents) because five operators had gone temporarily off-duty without permission.

Mike Adams, former high school principal of Piper High School in Kansas City, Kan., was a keynote speaker last night at Forum Hall as part of Integrity Week.

Former Piper High principal gives keynote speech for Integrity Week

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One in four believe he or she has to lie or cheat to get ahead, a speaker said Monday citing a recent survey in US News and World Report, and this mentality is being communicated to youth.

"They see adults, parents, businessmen and lawyers violating the ethical standards and just getting a slap on a wrist," Mike Adams said. "They conclude cheating is acceptable behavior in the rest of the world, and they don't understand why they should be held to a higher standard."

Adams was former head principal at Piper High School in Kansas City, Kan., during the 2001-02 school year, when biology teacher Christine Pelton held her students accountable for plagiarism. Parents criticized her decision, and the school board failed to support her when they reduced the penalties for the 28 students accused of plagiarism.

Pelton resigned her teaching position in protest and Adam's resignation followed. Now he is head principal of Arkansas City High School, and Monday, he was the keynote speaker for K-State's third annual Integrity Week.

Adams said students cheat for many reasons — parent pressure, peer pressure, the availability of the Internet and new technology — but he said the main reason stems from the importance placed on getting high grades.

"The fact is we are all completely judged on our grades and students know it," he said. "They are so important, we will sacrifice our own integrity to achieve that success. I believe cheating is not wrong. People expect us to attend seven classes a day, keep a 4.0 GPA, not to go crazy and to turn in all our work the next day. What are we supposed to do — fail?"

Because of the pressure, Adams said children are looking to adults for a moral compass.

"The problem is, we have become a society that is unwilling to accept responsibility for our action," he said. "Right and wrong is no longer clear. We used to believe when we made choices, good or bad, here were going to be consequences for those choices. Now we have parents and adults telling students by their actions they do not have to bear responsibility."

In a 1999 article in US News and World Report, 80 percent of 3,000 high school students surveyed admitted cheating on an exam at least once, he said. Fifty percent of those students did not believe cheating was wrong.

"There is this belief portrayed that you can and should do anything to get ahead," he said. "Adults in the real world reflect this attitude through their actions, and these high schoolers are seeing that."

Adams said that he has spent many hours reflecting on the events of Piper High School, and why the attitudes toward academic integrity have changed.

"I have asked how is it that something that initially seemed so insignificant could turn out to be event of such a magnitude," he said.

"As many of you can imagine, it wasn't easy living through the situation."

"But I am not a hero. The real hero is a young lady, a young teacher who had the courage to take a stand, and that is what students, parents, teachers and those in leadership need. They need the willingness to take a stand for what is right."

State, federal taxes due

By April Middleton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What once was months, then days, now has turned to hours.

Today is the deadline for taxes to be filed with the Internal Revenue Service and the Kansas Department of Revenue. Both must be postmarked by midnight to avoid penalties.

As of April 4, 350,000 Kansans filed paper returns, and 411,000 had filed electronically, Bill Barksdale, IRS spokesman, said. That leaves approximately 761,000 who have not filed federal returns yet, he said.

According to IRS predictions, about 38 million Americans will have waited to file their taxes until this last week of tax season.

Barksdale said about 81,000 Kansans will request extensions, which also must be filed by midnight.

"Some people assume it's an extension to pay, but it's purely an extension to file," he said.

Those who owe taxes and miss the midnight filing deadline will face late penalties as well as interest.

The post office in Manhattan will conduct business as normal today. Sam Collins, information clerk, said Topeka's downtown post office will be open late, but Manhattan's post office will close at 4:30 p.m. as usual.

Collins said that as long as tax forms are dropped in the outgoing mailbox by 5:45 p.m., they will be postmarked for April 15. The last pickup at the post office is 6 p.m., he said.

Sharon Daniels, office manager for H&R Block, said the business has seen an increase in people coming to get their taxes prepared in the last week.

However, she said, it seems like fewer people have waited until the last minute than in the past.

Their office, located next to Wal-Mart, will be open until 10 tonight. The branch in the mall will close at 9.

She said no appointments are being taken because so many people just walk in.

"People should come in as early as possible, though," she said. "If they are missing anything, it won't be possible to get some of the stuff in the evening."

Barksdale said late filers often miss out on opportunities to save money.

The most notable, he said, is

Tax Time Tips

- Last-minute filers can visit www.irs.gov for tax help, as well as information for filing electronically.
- Tax help, forms and electronic filing option for Kansas taxes can be obtained at www.ksrevenue.org.

the Earned Income Tax Credit. "It can be up to $4,000," he said. "The average is about $1,000."

He said people who wait until the last minute often don't get good tax advice because they are in a hurry and fail to realize they qualify for certain tax breaks.

One thing that is helping, he said, is that more people are filing electronically.

This year, Barksdale said, the number of people who filed their taxes electronically is up 11 percent.

"There are some good options for tax payers," he said. "And you can get your refund quicker and make arrangements to pay, if you owe."

But waiting for the last minute, Barksdale said, is usually not a good idea.

"When people wait until the last minute, they miss out on certain things," he said.

Asbestos work done at East Stadium

Officials assure caulking removal isn't dangerous

By Kelli Pitman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Asbestos caution signs lined the perimeter of East Stadium on Monday, but officials said there was no danger and no reason for concern.

Steve Galitzer, director of public safety, said the work was done to remove old caulking in the seams of the stadium's bleachers. The cracks were cleaned out so new caulking could be applied to prevent water leaks.

"The purpose of the work is to remove what is in there now to get a good sealant," he said.

There are two types of asbestos. The first, friable asbestos, can be crushed into powder and often is sprayed on ceilings or pipes or for insulation. The second type, nonfriable asbestos, is a hard, cement-type form that cannot be crushed. Nonfriable asbestos is what is used in the stadium bleachers.

Galitzer said concerns with asbestos arise when friable asbestos is crushed and becomes dust in the air. There are no concerns with the asbestos that has been used in the stadium.

However, when signs are displayed, people are to remain out of the work area that is marked off. People are allowed to go in only when wearing the correct protective equipment and if they are certified asbestos workers, he said.

"We can get fined if there are people in the areas where work is being done," Troy Bronaugh, asbestos shop supervisor, said.

Bronaugh said there is no danger with the asbestos, and the repair work at East Stadium should be done by Tuesday. No classes in the building were canceled.

TO THE POINT No-call list violators should face lawsuits

The Kansas no-call list has meant fewer interrupted dinners and fewer angry phone calls for more than 480,000 Kansans registered on the list.

The list prohibits solicitors from contacting those Kansans registered on the list. Exceptions include charities and political campaigns, or if there has been a relationship with a company during the previous 36 months.

Now, that list is backed up with the an accountability plan from the attorney general's office, which has collected $127,500 in court settlements.

Companies violating the list are given three warnings before a lawsuit is filed.

Those not aware of the Kansas database are given an assurance of voluntary compliance, which means the company agrees to follow the law in the future.

The attorney general's office not only created an effective way to limit solicitations, but is following through by holding violators accountable.

PEACEFUL PLEASURE

Illustration by Anna Wetzel | COLLEGIAN

Web site less far-fetched once considering peace component

"By masturbating as much as possible, in the dark, I will conserve energy, thereby reducing our dependence on oil." So said Squirrel from Iowa.

Sometimes, the junk mail folder in my inbox isn't completely worthless. When the advertisement for the Web site Masturbate for Peace appeared, I was at first disgusted.

By disgusted, I mean extremely intrigued. So I clicked on it.

Immediately, a plethora of anti-war/pro-masturbation statements splashed across my laptop screen. The site featured everything from haikus to bumper stickers with peaceful, and pleasurable, remarks from — so the Web site claimed — 12,000 submissions from about 80 countries around the world.

I read through a few of them. "My friendly fire hurts no one" and "Abuse your middle piece, not the Middle East" were my favorite bumper stickers. One is on its way to my Manhattan address.

The haikus would make any English professor proud. One visitor submission reads, "penetrating me/peacekeeping is such pleasure/screams will silence war."

I admit, I am a very disturbed human being.

PAUL RESTIVO

Nothing seems to shock me anymore. I have gotten used to being "goatse'd" (any Web-using college student should know what that means), my shock-o-meter is immune to the rotten dot coms of the Internet, and even the ever-increasing penis-pump advertisements get the roll-eye gesture. It doesn't bother me.

But using self-love to end conflict? I find it difficult to buy into the fact that the penis will become an "axis of justice."

And we Americans wonder why the French hate us, and why many Middle East countries see our country's citizens as hell-bound.

But don't get me wrong. There is nothing wrong with masturbation. Though I haven't contributed, I am an avid supporter of the sperm bank. I also am a supportive consumer of the pornography industry. But the last thing I want to think about during the act is what Saddam is up to. "Gripping piece in hand/imagine naked Saddam/spill peace on the land" writes a bard from Belfast.

In order to retain what little audience I have yet to offend in some capacity, I will steer clear from the religious perspective of this topic. There is, though, some merit in the Webmaster's claim that "people are going to masturbate anyway, so while doing it, they might as well give a thought to peace. A lot of people seem to have forgotten that peaceful solutions are even an option. We hope to remind them."

Masturbating to the thought of a woman (or man) whom you've never met is morally wrong, and (at least what the Americans for Purity Web site said) medical science proves that chronic masturbation causes weakness, depression, forgetfulness and nearsightedness. I, personally, would like to add swollen joints, acne and ridiculous hunger pangs to that list.

But to the point, if there is one, I agree that if a person chooses to masturbate, at least make it for a good cause. Shame on you if you choose to make an evening out of amateurs on hotornot.com. Props to you if you practice solo to promote peace. It is the least we can do as free Americans. Web sites like Masturbate for Peace make me proud to be an American, and though I am not promising that I will heed the advice of the Webmaster, I encourage chronic masturbators to give it a click. Give yourself a reason to have rosy palms.

Masturbate for Peace.

TO THE EDITOR

Columnist should reinforce personal stance with facts regarding KU basketball coach when contemplating future column topics

Editor:

It is time for Chris Shank to take off his purple-shaded sunglasses and open his eyes.

First, he claims Roy Williams "went ballistic on national television." Did Shank even watch the interview? Bonnie Bernstein asked about his level of interest in the North Carolina job, to which Coach Williams responded by saying he understood it needed to be asked, but he did not want to talk about it right now because he was more worried about his players, who had just lost the biggest game of their lives.

After this, Bernstein had the nerve to rephrase the question and ask if he would take the job if offered. This is when Roy "went ballistic."

At no point did he ever raise his voice. He simply stated that he knew that they had to ask as journalists, but it was not very nice to ask as a human being because he "could give a s--- about North Carolina right now." By saying he "went ballistic," Shank implies he had some kind of Bob Knight eruption where he went on a five-minute rampage, when the truth of the matter is, his voice never once raised.

Shank also calls Williams a "dictator of the KU empire." Does he not realize how Bill Snyder runs his program here? If anyone is anywhere close to a practice, there is someone to escort them away within seconds. When there is an injury to one of his players, he refuses to comment on them. Snyder had his share of run-ins with the media when constantly being hounded about the quarterback controversy. Granted, he never cursed at the media, but he made it clear he wanted to be left alone on the matter.

Snyder is not quite the God everyone makes him out to be. The fact of the matter is, at any school, the coach of the dominant athletic program has more say than everyone else within the athletics department. K-State and KU are no different.

Comparing Bill Snyder to Roy Williams is a joke in itself. Give Snyder credit for turning the team around, but since making them a "national powerhouse," what has he done? The team has been to one Fiesta Bowl, and that was before the Bowl Championship Series was in effect.

The program has been on track for 10 years now and he still has not even won a conference championship. It's pretty sad for someone who is considered one of the best coaches in college football.

His teams constantly make bowl games because of the nation's most laughable non-conference schedule. This year, with Troy State, McNeese State, Massachusetts and Marshall coming to town, Cat fans can expect some real nail biters in the first month of the season. Add to that dates with Kansas, Baylor and a Seneca Wallaceless Iowa State team, and K-State should have no problem getting their seven wins to become bowl eligible.

Roy, on the other hand, has produced a top 10 program year in and year out. His 418-101 record gives him a higher winning percentage than any active coach. He was the fastest coach ever to achieve 400 wins, and his teams have won their fair share of Big 8 and Big 12 titles. The only thing missing from his resume is a national championship, and most "experts" agree he will have at least one before he retires.

He plays the best of competition as well. This year's schedule included teams like Florida, Oregon, California and Arizona. Past seasons have seen teams like Kentucky, Michigan State and Cincinnati face the Jayhawks.

Finally, another reason given that Roy should leave is because K-State is bringing in this great recruiting class that is going to make the Wildcats the premier program in the state. While some articles do rank them as high as number one, it is not like KU is not bringing in its share of talent.

Kansas landed two top-20 players and three in the top 100 in the nation. K-State landed one, ranked number 73, according to espn.com.

Add to that teams like Arizona, Michigan State, Duke and Illinois landing multiple recruits in the top 50 and 100, and I begin to wonder how some magazines can rank them so high. Oh well, the point is that until K-State actually beats Kansas on the hardwood, KU will always be the premier program in the state, as well as one of the tops in the nation.

By the way, Pervis Pasco was a top junior recruit, was he not? Jim Wooldridge sure taught him a lot. Pasco had all the talent in the world, but unfortunately, a school like K-State did not allow him to show that.

Next time Shank writes a column trying to bash one of the top coaches and programs around, maybe he should back it up with a stat or two.

MANY FACES OF DARRELL HAMMOND

Audience enjoys impersonations

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Darrell Hammond impersonated nearly every unique news personality and actor Monday night.

The impressions he is best known for is what got people excited to see the "Saturday Night Live" comedian, said Rick Smith, who came to see the show.

"He does lots of impersonations," Smith said. "I don't know much about his standup, like if he has bits or one-liners. I just know him through 'Saturday Night Live,' and I am mainly excited for him to do his impersonations."

Smith said he was excited to see Hammond and had the date marked on his calendar.

"I was aware of the show immediately," Smith said. "I told my wife, we got a babysitter, and here we are."

Everyone who was expecting impersonations got what they were looking for in Hammond's performance.

Hammond joked about the current news, past and present politicians and his personal life.

Later, after explaining that he has 91 different characters that he impersonates, he took requests from the audience toward the end of the show.

The characters that Hammond impersonated were the key part of the show, said Erik Patterson, senior in park management and conservation.

"I thought the show was great, and he was really funny," Patterson said. "I'm a big fan of the show, and I knew it would be good."

"I liked all of the characters that he brought over from 'Saturday Night Live.' We need more big comedians like this."

Hammond said he enjoyed performing in front of a college crowd. He said that he liked how the audience would interact with him.

"College audiences have a lot of energy," Hammond said. "I know it sounds weird, but they have a lot of oxygen, and that means they laugh quicker and louder. It jizzes you up. Plus, they're educated and up on the times."

Hammond said that he has done impressions all of his life, his first one being Popeye. He said that doing both "Saturday Night Live" and standup is fun, but the TV show is more challenging.

"In standup, I write all of my material," Hammond said. "You get to talk to the audience, and it can become a better show if you get to know the crowd and what they want to hear, like tonight with Marquette and the two Kevins (people in the audience)."

"But on SNL, it's more challenging with all of the bits. It takes a lot to put together a 90-minute show. Plus, as a performer, getting to be in front of 20 million people — you can't beat it as a rush."

Hammond said he had been to Manhattan before, and that he was glad to be back. He said he enjoyed performing here because, as a comedian, you have to think about what you're going to say.

"You have to think about your jokes," Hammond said. "The executives say that 'you're playing for Kansas' and that means you're selling to America."

"Millions of people live in a few square miles in New York, and that's not exactly normal. You can get lost in some of the clubs in New York, and here it's different. You get a real sense of feeling funny if you can make people here laugh."

Comedian Darrell Hammond of "Saturday Night Live" fame performed at McCain Auditorium on Monday evening. Hammond has played 91 different characters on the show.

Freddie Prinze Jr. hopes to pursue writing career

Freddie Prinze Jr. says he plans to stop acting eventually to pursue a writing career.

"I'm going to stop acting in the next few years because it's just too weird," Prinze said in the April 19 issue of TV Guide. "You have to constantly be willing to live in a scary, emotional place, which is why actors are in therapy all the time."

Monica Lewinsky will be host on new game show for Fox network

Handbag maker, gossip-column fodder and former presidential intern Monica Lewinsky has a new gig: host of a dating game on Fox called "Mr. Personality."

"I've come to realize that I've already had my own reality show," Lewinsky told Newsweek for a story in this week's edition, which comes out Monday.

"Mr. Personality," which debuts April 21, will feature a stockbroker named Hayley and 20 masked men vying for her affection. Hayley must choose a man based on his inner beauty.

In addition to being the host of the show, Lewinsky offers dating advice in her role as Hayley's confidante.

Russell Crowe honeymoon in Australia with new wife

Oscar-winning star Russell Crowe is honeymooning in style — Australian style, that is.

During the weekend, the "Gladiator" star and his new wife, Danielle Spencer, stayed in a motel in the city of Rockhampton on Australia's east coast and dined on takeout fried chicken.

After a lavish wedding ceremony at his estate near the coastal resort of Coffs Harbor last Monday, the Crowes are now on a "self-drive honeymoon" around Australia, Brisbane's Courier-Mail newspaper reported.

The paper ran a photograph of the newlyweds outside the Red Rooster chicken restaurant in Rockhampton.

Artist uses traditional techniques in creating landscape pieces

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's an immediate need to take what you see and directly respond to what's in front of you.

This is why Chad Lindemann, graduate student in art, said he prefers pen-and-ink drawing for his art. Lindemann's masters of fine arts exhibit, "Simple Gifts," is on display at the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union until April 25.

Many of Lindemann's drawings are of landscapes.

"I like landscapes because of the timeless qualities of them. They're close to nature, and there's some sort of empathy or something that you can capture with landscapes, and that's one thing that I strive for," Lindemann said.

Lindemann said his landscapes initially are from his sketches or black and white photographs taken at special locations like places around Kansas or his home state of Minnesota.

"None of the pictures are any particular place, just kind of an imaginary place that I've put together," he said.

Lauren Goehring, junior in general and operational management, said two pieces of Lindemann's art that struck her were "Quietude" and "Hope," which both are etchings.

"They seem really peaceful," Goehring said. "They remind me of where my grandparents live in Glenwood, Arkansas, and I love going to what's in front of you."

The title of the exhibit, "Simple Gifts," comes from an old Shaker hymn by the same name, Lindemann said.

"A lot of my landscapes are traditional in context. My role model is Rembrandt. I enjoy those kind of scenes, and I love classical music. Aaron Copeland is a composer who did 'Appalachian Spring.' He's a modern composer, but very traditional, also," Lindemann said. "He took the basic melody for it from a Shaker hymn called 'Simple Gifts.'"

Jim Munce, professor of art, said he agreed with Lindemann's perception of the art.

"He's pretty much in line to a traditional approach to landscape and a fairly traditional approach to etching," Munce said.

The "Simple Gifts" exhibit contains pen-and-ink drawings, ballpoint pen drawings, etchings and thermal drawings with a hair dryer and soldering iron.

Lindemann said etching is done on a copper plate that is 12- or 16-gauge in thickness. He uses metal tools to cut to gouge or to engrave into the metal. He then uses acid to eat away at parts of the metal.

K-State retired grain science worker Dick Hahn looks over Chad Lindemann's artwork on display at the William T. Kemper Art Gallery, in the K-State Student Union. "I've just looked at the first couple pictures, and Chad can certainly draw. He really understands composition," Hahn said of Lindemann, graduate student in fine arts.

In the process of doing that, he creates small grooves in the sheet of metal, where he places ink, and then pulls the prints off of that, he said.

"With printmaking, it's an extension of drawing. Because with print making you can increase the mark making, you can increase the detail, and you can increase the texture it builds up," Lindemann said.

The thermal drawing with a hair dryer and soldering iron, which is done using heat sensitive paper is something new for Lindemann.

Anything that applies heat to the paper, like a hair dryer or a soldering iron, will change the pigment of that paper, Lindemann said.

"It's only something I've been experimenting with, and to be honest, I've only done three or four, so I haven't done many. It's something I will continue to do, but I will still always do etchings and drawings with pen and ink," he said.

BASEBALL FALLS APART

Tracking the Wildcats

A quick look at K-State's longest losing streak in school history:

March 21 at Nebraska

Three Wildcat pitchers allowed 17 hits, while Husker ace Aaron Marsden scattered six hits through nine innings to hand K-State a 12-4 loss and begin the Cats' descent to the Big 12 cellar.

March 22 at Nebraska

Three of K-State's runs came off errors, but Nebraska's offense picked up the slack with 10 hits to escape the upset 10-4.

March 23 at Nebraska

Despite an early 6-1 deficit, the Huskers scrapped back with four runs in the third inning and five more in the fifth to sweep the Cats and nab the Huskers' eighth win in a row over K-State in Lincoln 11-9.

March 25 at Creighton

Two four-run innings and a lack of Wildcat offense did K-State in, as the Bluejays maintained a shutout through four innings in earning CU's first win in five meetings with the Cats 11-6.

March 26 vs. Wichita State

After leading 4-3 in the sixth inning, the Shockers plated 10 runs during the next two frames to pull away 13-4 before cruising to a 14-10 win.

March 28 vs. Missouri

Four Missouri errors didn't hurt the Tigers, as Mizzou broke its six-game slide with plenty of offense in a 14-2 win over K-State.

March 29 vs. Missouri

Seven of the Tigers' eight runs were credited to Wildcat starter Sean Clancy, but only five were earned. Nevertheless, K-State managed just five hits to fall 8-3.

March 30 vs. Missouri

Missouri and K-State combined for 23 hits, but scoring was at a relative minimum as the Tigers clinched their first sweep of the Cats since 1998 with a 5-4 win.

April 4 at Oklahoma State

Oklahoma State's five-run third inning put K-State on the mats, and the Wildcats would manage just three hits the rest of the way in a 10-1 loss to the Cowboys.

April 5 at Oklahoma State

K-State again was held to just one run, while Oklahoma State scored in double digits for the second-straight day in the Cowboys' 11-1 win.

April 6 at Oklahoma State

OSU took over sole possession of first place in the Big 12 and swept the season series with the Wildcats for the 15th time in 20 meetings with an 11-9 win.

April 9 at Wichita State

A 13-2 loss to the Shockers tied the longest losing streak under Coach Mike Clark's watch, as WSU jumped on Wildcat pitching for four runs in the second, fifth and eighth innings.

April 11 vs. Texas A&M

K-State's first conference night game at Tointon Family Stadium in nearly five years was ruined when Texas A&M fought back from three down in the fifth to win 6-4.

April 12 vs. Texas A&M

The Cats trailed by as many as six but left 12 on base in a 12-7 loss that extended the team's losing streak to 14 games, matching the 1984 squad's mark for the longest in school history.

April 13 vs. Texas A&M

This year's Cats surpassed the 1984 team's mark, but there were no cheers after the Aggies' 16-3 win. The game was called in the seventh inning due to the Big 12 Conference's run rule.

Second baseman Marc Chabot completes the first half of a double play by tagging second base to get out Texas A&M's Justin Pouk.

Baseball coach Mike Clark argues with an umpire Saturday at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats return to action at 7 tonight against Washington.

Cats look to break record losing streak against Washington

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It might have been a good thing. Heading into last weekend's series with No. 17 Texas A&M, K-State was in danger of owning the longest losing streak in program history.

Now that danger is a reality. The Wildcats (10-23, 0-12), after dropping three straight to the Aggies, can go forward without worrying about the streak swallowing them up — that already happened.

Now, K-State has to focus on beating some teams to get its season heading in a respectable direction.

First up: Washington. The Huskies, an NCAA regional team one year ago, will visit Tointon Family Stadium for a 7 p.m. game tonight and a noon game Wednesday.

UW is out to a fast start in 2003. The Huskies are 22-12 overall, 4-5 in the Pac-10, and have won 18 of their last 24 contests.

Coach Mike Clark said the Cats' weekend

Huskies riding waves of success into town

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Coach Mike Clark tried to remain upbeat following the Wildcats' 16-3 loss to Texas A&M on Sunday.

The strain on his face, however, told a different story. Mired in the throes of a 15-game losing streak, Clark has begun to fill the roles of both coach and sports psychologist. His drought-busting medicine: keep having fun.

"You've got to," Clark said. "If we quit, we don't have a shot. It's a situation where you just have to keep going."

That's been easier said than done, however. K-State has been outscored 164-68 during the streak, including 34-14 against the Aggies. Now, the Wildcats welcome a Washington club to Tointon Family Stadium that has won 18 of its last 24.

"It'll be good playing them, a top-ranked team like that," junior Ty Soto said.

The Huskies have plenty of lumber in their lineup, with seven regulars batting over .300. That includes junior Chad Boudon and senior Tila Reynolds.

Boudon, a Hawaii transfer, already has belted 11 home runs, while Reynolds, a 13th-round selection of the Milwaukee Brewers, has swiped eight bases and hit .320 this season.

Washington's surge and K-State's slide seemingly adds up to disaster for the Cats.

But senior Tim Doty said that's why they play the game.

"It's a great opportunity for us," Doty said. "If we can go out there and get a win against a good ball team like that, it'd be a great thing for our confidence. We're not going to go in scared at all. We're going to go in and give it our best shot."

One K-State advantage will be experience. The 3-4-5 combination of Doty, senior Pat Maloney and Soto anchors a regular fielding rotation of seven upperclassmen.

Washington, with just one senior in its lineup, likely will rely on sophomores Aaron Hathaway and Kyle Larson, each tabbed a Freshman All-American in 2002.

The youth movement doesn't stop there, however. Two freshmen again are making quality starts for the Huskies in 2003. Simi Reynolds is batting .284, while fellow rookie outfielder Brent Lillibridge is riding a 12-game hitting streak.

"Pac-10 schools always have a lot of talent on the West Coast," Doty said. "We look for them to come in here playing hard."

Washington comes to K-State as part of a five-game road swing. The Huskies flew straight to Manhattan from Tucson, Ariz., where they dropped two of three to conference foe

Cat baseball team's season woes begin with pitching

Ask Coach Mike Clark about his team's recent pitching struggles, and you'll need toothpicks to keep your eyes open.

It's not that Clark is long-winded. It's just that he's got plenty to work with.

A monthlong, 15-game, record-setting train-wreck stretch, highlighted by Texas A&M's sweep of the Cats last weekend, has given the former pitcher volumes of material.

Clark probably would begin by explaining his starters' inability to avoid the big inning early, i.e. Sunday's series finale with the Aggies.

Eric Rollins — solid as K-State's closer this year — got a rare start Sunday, but the sophomore gave up a four-run third inning and a three-run fourth before the Cats could muster a run, trampling any chance at ending K-State's misery on my birthday.

Early big-run innings by the opposition have become the norm during the Cats' bellyflop into the wrong chapter of K-State's record books.

Cat pitchers have allowed four or more runs in an inning before the sixth 12 times during the streak.

Next, Clark might cite shoddy middle relief work.

Trailing 7-4 in the fourth Saturday, Clark turned to junior Sean Clancy to put out starter Kevin Melcher's fire.

Clancy gave up four more, though, and the Cats fell 12-7.

Down 8-3 Sunday, Clark again summoned the pen for damage control. Four pitchers trotted out to the mound, but none made much of a case to stay while the Cats were run-ruled 16-3.

Friday night's 6-4 setback illustrated another of Clark's frustrations.

With staff ace Jim Ripley staked to a 4-1 fifth-inning lead, the stars were in line for K-State's first win since March 19. After all, the margin represented the Cats' first lead in 42 innings.

College basketball | Williams off to UNC
Roy Williams told the Kansas Jayhawks he is leaving to coach North Carolina, his beloved alma mater, according to players who attended a meeting with him Monday.

The decision comes three years after Williams rejected an offer to take over the Tar Heels' storied basketball program, where he learned his craft as an assistant under Dean Smith.

Williams' return to Chapel Hill, N.C., ends his 15-year tenure at a program he helped turn into one of the nation's most successful.

The fourth fastest coach in NCAA Division I history to get 400 victories, Williams (418-101) won nine conference championships at KU and took the Jayhawks to the past 14 NCAA tournaments, including title games twice.

NBA | Jordan honored at last home game

Michael Jordan received a U.S. flag from Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, beginning a night of honors for Jordan during his final home appearance as an NBA player.

A bigger tribute was scheduled to take place after Monday's game between the Washington Wizards and the New York Knicks, with the details kept secret.

Rumsfeld, who received a loud ovation, presented Jordan with a flag that flew over the Pentagon on the one-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks.

MLB | Reds' Larkin on 15-day DL

Cincinnati Reds shortstop Barry Larkin was placed on the 15-day disabled list Monday with a strained left calf.

Larkin, in his 18th season with Cincinnati, was injured while legging out a triple last Thursday in Houston. He has not played since, and was put on the DL retroactive to Friday.

It's another blow to the struggling Reds, who lost star center fielder Ken Griffey Jr. to a dislocated right shoulder April 5. They were 4-8 heading into Monday night's game against the Chicago Cubs.

Gunfire claims student's life

Police search for teenage suspects in New Orleans school shooting

By Mary Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — A gunman with an AK-47 automatic rifle shot and killed a student and wounded three others Monday at a New Orleans high school, police said. Four suspects were arrested after a sweep of the surrounding neighborhood.

Chief Eddie Compass said he did not know if the suspects were students at John McDonogh High School, where the shooting happened at about 10:30 a.m.

"Our tactical units have swept all the buildings. The children are completely safe," Compass said. The wounded were not believed to have life-threatening injuries, he said.

The suspects, who range in age from 15 to 19, were arrested about three blocks from the school. Police said they got a description of the getaway vehicle and arrested two in it and two in a house nearby.

He said charges have not been decided.

There was no immediate word on possible motive or how the gun got through metal detectors and guards at the school.

Anthony Amato, school system superintendent who has been on the job since February, tried to calm parents but was heckled with cries of "Where was the guard?"

One of the students, a 15-year-old girl, was in surgery at the Medical Center of Louisiana with more than one wound, spokesman Jerry Romig said. Two other girls, both 16, were wounded in the leg or buttocks.

The identity of the dead student, a boy, was not immediately released.

Ninth-grader Garick Jacob, 14, said he was in the gym when it happened.

"Somebody pulled out a gun," he said. "They started shooting, and I started running." He said he did not see the shooting, but it sounded like about 30 shots, adding, "I was really scared."

John McDonogh High is in the Mid-City neighborhood, about a mile north of the French Quarter on Esplanade Avenue. The school is one block from the Degas House, where the French painter Edgar Degas stayed with relatives when he visited New Orleans in the 1870s. It now is a bed-and-breakfast.

Traffic in the area was shut down, and hundreds of people gathered outside, some of them crying. Parents were not allowed inside.

Darlene Claiborn, a mother who rushed to the school, said her daughter called her from inside a classroom on a cell phone.

"How can this happen in a school?" she demanded.

"They have guards in there. They're supposed to have security."

In another, unrelated campus shooting Monday, a gun went off in a Shreveport school — apparently accidentally — while one student was showing it to another, hitting the second boy in the stomach, police and school officials said. The student who brought the gun ran away; police were looking for him. The wounded student was in serious condition.

"How can this happen in a school? They have guards in there. They're supposed to have security."

Commission inaugurations tonight

City commissioners, mayor begin new term after meeting

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The newly elected city commissioners and mayor will begin their terms as they are sworn in at tonight's City Commission meeting.

Commissioner Mark Tausig will be inaugurated as Manhattan's new mayor, in addition to Ed Klimek, Bruce Snead and Mark Hatesohl sworn in as the newly elected commissioners.

Incumbents Klimek and Snead will be sworn in for four-year Commission terms because they received the two most populous votes at the general election April 1. Hatesohl will be sworn in for a two-year term.

On election night, Hatesohl said he was disappointed he isn't going to be mayor from this election but is excited he got his foot in the door with a two-year city commissioner term.

He said that in two years, if people like him and he's enjoying his role as a commissioner, he will run again.

Tausig was elected for his first Commission term in the 2001 general elections, when he received the most votes.

The candidates who receive the two most populous votes in the previous Commission general election determine Manhattan's mayor.

Gary Fees, city clerk, said the procedure to inaugurate the mayor based on the most votes in the election is from traditional procedure.

He said there is not an ordinance that states how Manhattan's mayor is elected, but using the popular vote as a method has been the city's tradition.

If tradition stands, Klimek will become mayor in 2005 and Snead will become mayor in 2006, according to the 2003 election results.

Fees said the swearing-in process involves all the elected commissioners participating in the commission pledge.

Tausig said that even with the current economic situations nationwide, Manhattan has a lot of positive things happening, but the commission will continue to show fiscal constraint in budgeting to keep taxes down for the community.

"Manhattan has positioned itself so that even in this time of economic sluggishness, we're somewhat blossoming," Tausig said.

He referred to the recent establishment of Home Depot, along with the future businesses of Target and Super Wal-Mart.

Auth-Florence Manufacturing is another company Tausig is excited about, because it will bring 250 jobs for the community.

"I'm really happy being on the city commission and to be mayor this time," Tausig said.

DRUNK | Sober students learn effects of alcohol promote smart decisions, Hauser said.

"We don't want people to get behind the wheel if they have been drinking," she said. "They can call a designated driver or stay where they are and sleep it off."

Hauser said it's important for students to experience the effects alcohol has when they are sober, because when they have been drinking, they perceive themselves as OK and don't realize how much their motor skills are affected.

"They need to realize how seriously alcohol can affect them," she said.

"Students need to understand that they wouldn't want to be in a car under these conditions."

Thrasher, junior in human resource management, contacted Brenda Parker, county coordinator for the Riley County Farm Bureau Association, when she found out about the program through her county fair.

"Farm Bureau put it on at the Stafford County Fair, and I thought it would be a good thing to do here," she said. "The students need to see how drinking impairs their driving skills."

Fatal Vision was a program that hadn't been done before in Manhattan, Parker said.

"We were contacted by Rebecca," she said. "We had never done it before, so we contacted Marieta and got everything set up."

Danger on the road

The program is free of charge, Parker said.

Hauser said Farm Bureau is not trying to imply that students should not drink, but they should make smart decisions when they do so.

"If you do choose to drink, don't get behind the wheel," she said.

STREAK | Wildcats prepare to meet Huskies tonight

series with Texas A&M didn't give him or his team a lot of time to consider the impending showdown with Washington.

"I don't know a whole lot about them," he said.

"I haven't had an opportunity to sit back and see anything. I just know they've been playing real well, and they're going to be a great challenge for us.

"But it's a situation where we need to come back and not bring the garbage from the A&M series into the next ballgame. We have to stay positive and we have to find a way to work through this."

Working through the Huskies will mean attention to a very offensive bunch. Washington carries a .291 team batting average, has pounded out 43 home runs and has 196 RBI this season.

K-State can hang with UW offensively, however. The Cats, at .293, are connecting at almost an identical rate as the Huskies. The Wildcats also have driven in three more runs than the Huskies.

First baseman Tim Doty said K-State's offense is more than capable of getting the squad back into a groove.

"We've been hitting balls hard the whole time we've been losing," he said. "We've just been hitting them right at people. And we've mixed in bad at bats. But we have focus and we have plenty of older guys who've been through a lot."

Third baseman Ty Soto said the Wildcat offense isn't going to change because of UW.

"We don't change anything," he said. "We come out, stay positive, play every game and don't think about losses that have happened in the past. It's good that we're playing a good team like Washington, because it will prepare us for the Big 12."

Offense hasn't been a problem for K-State. Washington has won 18 of 24 with nearly the same productivity from its bats. But the Huskies have been getting it done from the mound as well.

Washington sports a 4.73 team ERA and 255 strikeouts. K-State, on the other hand, brings a 7.22 ERA to the park and has 48 fewer strikeouts.

In three straight losses to A&M, K-State pitchers surrendered 34 runs. In their last two series combined, Wildcat pitchers surrendered a staggering 66 runs.

Clark said he must find pitching somewhere if his club is to compete with the hard-hitting Huskies.

"What we really need is for somebody to step up Tuesday and Wednesday and just show us they can do it," he said. "We'll keep working in the bullpen to see if anybody can make some strides."

"But basically, we don't have anybody who's really executing, whether it be a midweek game or on the weekend."

Take a seat.

House Mom Appreciation

Beta Theta Pi

As a Beta wife, Beta mother, Beta aunt and niece, Mom Lonker lives and breathes Beta Theta Pi. Mom Lonker steamrolled into this school year with the same purpose and desire to assist the chapter and the Greek community that she has possessed throughout her tenure with the Betas. She is relentless in giving her utmost time and attention to every detail of our chapter. The values and principles that she holds so near to her heart radiate from her daily interaction with our chapter. She continually challenges the members of the house to become respectable, successful, and happy young men. She goes beyond her job description and provides us with a maternal figure that truly takes an active role in our lives.

Mom Lonker separates herself from the average housemother in her capacity to listen to and provide for our brothers. She asks about problems men are having, provides knowledge to help make decisions, and pours out love to help brothers through a difficult time. Her dedication to making each member feel like an important individual and member of the Beta family has no end. Beta Theta Pi is blessed to have a housemother with such dedication, love, and commitment.

She served on the district and conference councils of the Methodist Church in Glasgow. Mom was also heavily involved in The Girl Scout Council, as well as extensive political involvement. With that, she helped with numerous governors' campaigns. When not working and helping with Alpha Delta Pi, Mom enjoys golfing, biking and gardening. Our house mom is a wonderful, caring person who puts all her energy into getting to know the girls in the house and truly puts all of her heart into everything that she does for us! WE LOVE HER!

ΛΧΑ

Pam Gilman has been the Lambda Chi Alpha housemom for three years, and she truly epitomizes what a mother should be. Working hard every day as a waitress at the VFW, she takes time off to make sure that she is there for every formal dinner, football game, philanthropy and even date party. She wakes up before the sun every morning to make juice and coffee and to set out breakfast. There isn't anything that she wouldn't do for any of her guys. Her personality is one of the best, combining all the attributes of our mothers at home: kind, gentle, and sweet; but she will also get after us in order to keep us in line. Along with her ability to teach and show us that she cares, she knows how to have fun. Whether it is just sitting down and talking to watching her sing at the "V." Mom Gilman is one of those people that everyone can feel comfortable around. No matter where she is at, whatever she is doing, if you know her, you love her. Thanks so much for everything you have done.

Tennis puts 5-match streak against Big 12 rival Nebraska

Consistency remains the name of the game for the team's success in this weekend's matchup

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riding a five-match winning streak into today's match against No. 66 Nebraska, Coach Steve Bietau stressed one area of concern after Saturday's 5-2 win over 61st-ranked Kansas - inconsistency.

"Obviously, I'm very happy to win the match," Bietau said. "It guarantees a winning record in the Big 12 this year, and it keeps us in the running for both a top-four seeding in the conference tournament as well as consideration for a spot in the NCAAs. Having said that, I'm not very happy with the way we played simply because we were too inconsistent."

The Cats' doubles play is one reason for concern, Bietau said.

"Both our doubles teams had great starts, got out to 4-0 leads and failed to recognize some changes in the match and ended up losing a match I felt wasn't necessary to lose."

The 34th-ranked Wildcats (11-4, 6-2) will look to correct those flaws at 2 p.m. today when they play the Huskers at the Washburn Tennis Facility. Bietau said he plans to approach today's match the same way he has all season.

"We try and make a habit of expecting tough matches. That approach has worked pretty well so far," Bietau said. "When you look at everything, we're going to go into it expecting a real fight."

Despite battling inconsistency, the Cats have rattled off five straight wins. But despite the hot streak, Bietau said he hasn't given it any thought.

"To be honest, I haven't

PITCHING | Team's problems begin with defense

young arms have surrendered 164 runs, nearly 11 per contest, to nudge the team's ERA from 5.50 to 9.50.

It hasn't been credited to nickel-and-dime stuff, either.

While the number of hits allowed before the streak began (198) is identical to the number surrendered since, opponents' slugging percentages have shot from .431 before the streak to .568 since.

That, not surprisingly, means K-State's competition has made the most of the Cats' weak pitching - namely, with extra base hits off grooved pitches in the strike zone.

The long and the short of it is the Cats need an answer - quickly.

Clark and pitching coach Mike Hensley have tried just about everything to motivate these guys.

They've shouted until they were red, they've explained the lopsided statistics, they've retaught the basics and they've tried moving guys around, but it still comes down to one thing.

Someone has to step up, and it can't be Clark or Hensley. Pitching is part physical talent and a much bigger part - mental fortitude.

The Cats have two choices: Show up and make 2003 known for something other than the longest losing streak in school history, or make the rest of the season one of the longest springs in recent memory.

The decision rests on the shoulders of Wednesday's starter.

Arizona.

K-State doesn't expect the Huskies to come in dragging, though. In fact, time on the road has its benefits, Doty said.

"What it does is, it helps you focus on baseball more than anything," he said. "It does pull you down physically. You get a little bit tired. But when you're playing baseball every day, you stay more focused."

K-State, meanwhile, will attempt to regain its focus as the Wildcats continue an 11-game homestand in hopes of snapping the longest losing streak in school history.

"We're loose, we're confident, everything looks good and boom, we just get jumped up," Clark said. "But Tuesday's a new day."

Kappa Kappa Gamma Housemother

Meet Michelle Alexander Edie, current housemother of Kappa Kappa Gamma. Before becoming our mom, she worked for an airline industry as a corporate travel specialist for a major corporation and worked five years with a major airline. Another former profession of hers was teaching preschool! She attended Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Dallas to receive her Christian Ministry Education degree, and moved back to Manhattan to complete her teaching degree. While at Kansas State, she is determined to obtain her Elementary Education degree and Masters in Education Administration.

It has been a very exciting semester for us at KKG because we have had house parents! When Michelle moved back to Manhattan a year ago, she met Darell Edie. They were married December 14, 2002, here in Manhattan. It has been wonderful being able to share in their first months together as a married couple! We are all very excited for Michelle and Darell and wish them the best.

Many of Michelle's hobbies include singing, reading, playing tennis, cooking and entertaining others. Michelle has many demanding responsibilities and duties that go unnoticed, and she completes them with no complaints. On top of all of these duties, most importantly, Michelle gives Kappa a homey atmosphere and really makes us feel like we have a mother away from home.

She has been a great friend to all of us and we are so lucky to have her in our lives! Thanks for everything you do, Mom!

We love you!
Your girls of Kappa Kappa Gamma is a local Kansas gal. This is her first year as a housemother. She babysits her six grandchildren and is active in their lives also, if only to bring them over to play with us. Along with her six grandchildren she has three grown children. She is more than just a "housemom" she is more like a second mom to all of us. Not only does she serve as a mother figure, but also a friend, someone you can talk to and someone who you can count on. She is very much active in not only the fraternity but also the daily lives of all the men of Sigma Chi.

This only being her first year with us she has made a significant difference to all of us. She has done so many things for us that words cannot describe how we feel about having her be a part of our house. She is active in all house events from: going to all intramural games, dressing up for data parties, being that special date for semiformal, or being the only housemother on an Up 'Til Dawn team. Dana Pierce is a housemother that has gone above and beyond the call of duty. She is a woman who helps drive us to be successful and never settle for second best. The men of Sigma Chi would like to thank her and let her know that we really appreciate her.

Corrine McCollom has been the housemother to Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity for three years. She is a native of Manhattan and of Kansas State University where she attended college. While here during college Corrine was initiated into the Alpha Delta Pi sorority with the class of 1942. After graduating she made her home in many places across the country from Portland to Los Angeles to Houston, until finally moving back to Manhattan. During this time she became the mother of two sons who now live in Chicago and Austin.

When asked if she would like to become a housemother to Sig Ep Corrine had some doubts at first. What helped her finally make her decision was the fact that her husband was also a member of this chapter with the class of 1946. She was immediately surprised at how much fun she had living at the house. The members of Sig Ep were equally excited to have Corrine in the house. She has been a constant sight at intramural games at which she attends almost without failure. Mom has been instrumental in planning many events within the house, like Father's Weekend and etiquette dinners. But to the men of Sigma Phi Epsilon it is the little things that Mom does for them to show that she cares. During finals week she sets out a different snack, like root beer floats, each night to help break the monotony of studying. Mom irons and mends clothing for members and is always a supportive ear for those who need to talk. Mom is fond of saying that she wishes that everyone could know how good the members are to her, but that is because she is great to us. Thank you for all that you do, we love you, Mom.

Each morning

we pause at Mom's open door to say hello and grab a handful of our favorite candies before leaving for class. Michael Cody has been the housemother for Pi Beta Phi for the past three years. Mom Cody is originally from Chicago. She has two children and one granddaughter. Her granddaughter, Finnian, is the apple of her grandma's eye. Mom Cody came to Manhattan 21 years ago and has been here ever since. She received her masters in educational media and technology from Kansas State University.

Mom Cody is a wonderful woman. She's not only a mother, she's a mentor, a counselor, and a friend. Mom Cody makes sure our house runs smoothly. She takes care of us when we are sick and gives us advice when it's needed. Her main priority is to support us girls in everything we do. She makes sure there is a good communication between the girls and the staff, so we can all live in a harmonious environment. Mom Cody is easy to talk to and truly cares about our well-being. She treats us as if we were her own daughters. She is willing to do anything for us. We cannot thank Mom Cody enough for everything she has done for us.

We, the women of Kappa Alpha Theta, would like to show a great appreciation for our house mom Virginia Mitchell! Mom Mitchell has been a friend, a source of support and so much more. We want to thank Mom Mitchell for her past five years of loving service!

Love, Your "daughters" in Kappa Alpha Theta

APARTMENT | Tenants agree on pros, cons to apartment lifestyle

Food was an issue for Goodheart while in the residence halls because of her special diet. "I'm a vegetarian, and I like making my own food," she said. "In the dorms, I didn't have much of a selection."

For Candace Feldman, who lives in a four-bedroom apartment at University Commons, the food choices in the residence halls and her sorority were something she could not handle.

"I lived in West for a year and a sorority house, and the food was horrible, especially in the sorority," Feldman, sophomore in theater, said. "Living in an apartment, now I can buy what I want, and I eat much better because I can pick the foods that are healthy for me."

Sometimes there can be loud noise in a large complex like Chase, but Goodheart said it isn't a huge problem.

"It's not horrible, but sometimes I'm like, 'What are they doing up there? Wrestling?'" she said.

Each month, Goodheart pays $260 — her share of the rent — plus $30 to $50 for utilities. She said she doesn't see her landlord much, if at all.

"There isn't much interaction with the landlords, but the maintenance people are nice," Goodheart said. "It might take a while for them to get around to us because there are so many other people to help, but they'll always listen to whatever problems we have."

Andy Packard, sophomore in business, said apartment living has all the advantages, with one exception.

"I hate dealing with the landlord," said Packard, who lives in an apartment on Claffin Road. "But I live right next to campus, I get to have pets and we're getting a good price for the large apartment we have, so I think it's great."

Goodheart said she likes the fact that leases at Chase are separate.

"Each roommate is responsible for their part of the rent," Goodheart said.

Having her own space, Feldman is also enjoying her privacy.

"No one is barging in and taking my clothes without asking," she said. "It's great not to have to deal with that anymore."

Although she has her own bedroom in her apartment, there are things about the residence halls Goodheart said she misses.

"It was always easy to find people to hang out with," she said. "It was fun going to eat together. I still see all my friends, though, so it's not completely bad not being in the dorms."

Overall, Goodheart said she likes apartment living, but had suggestions for future students looking to rent.

All money gathered from lawsuits and settlements is used to fund the enforcement of the no-call list, Watson said. Eventually, the no-call list is required to be entirely self funded, Watson said.

"We have had engagements, and we have defeated the enemy in every one of those engagements," said Capt. Frank Thorp, a spokesman at U.S. Central Command.

The operation inside Tikrit, Brooks added, "is really the only significant combat action that occurred within the last 24 hours." McChrystal told reporters, "I think we will move into a phase where it

With Saddam and his two sons dead or in hiding, his regime gone and his armed forces routed, U.S. commanders took steps to reduce American firepower in the war zone.

A U.S. defense official said two of five aircraft carrier battlegroups in the region would soon be departing, the USS Kitty Hawk returning to its base in Japan and the USS Constellation to San Diego. Each carrier has about 80 warplanes, including F/A-18 and F-14 strike aircraft as well as surveillance.

Greek Affairs to make changes

Coordinator position filled

By Mako Shores
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Angie Goodson was named the new coordinator of Greek Affairs on Tuesday, taking the place of Barb Robel, who is retiring at the end of the year.

"Angie will be the primary adviser for all chapters and presidents," Jeff Rundle, outgoing Interfraternity Council president, said. "We have confidence in Angie and the direction we're going in."

Along with a new adviser, Greek Affairs is also seeking two graduate assistants for next year. The graduate students will work 20 hours per week in the Office of Greek Affairs.

"Right now we have a full-time adviser and half-time adviser doing the work," Rundle, senior in chemical engineering, said. "When Barb is gone, Angie will be left with doing a position and a half of work. The two new positions will equal out to one full-time person to provide additional support."

The graduate assistants will also help with co-advising other organizations the office handles, including the Greek Week Steering Committee, Order of Omega, Greek Ambassadors and Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol, Goodson said.

Obscene material up for veto

Governor to decide on funding question

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has until Monday to accept or reject an amendment to Senate Bill No. 6 that would prohibit public universities from purchasing "obscene" videos for courses like human sexuality, and would terminate all funding to violating departments.

Sebelius received the bill on Friday, April 11, after the Kansas House and Senate passed the amended bill last week. Although most of the bill concerns the Kansas racing and gaming commission, a separate amendment sponsored by Sen. Susan Wagle, R-Wichita, would require the Kansas Board of Regents to cut all funding to any departments that purchased "obscene" videos.

Wagle proposed the amendment on March 27 in response to anonymous complaints about obscene images used in Professor Dennis Dailey's Human Sexuality and Everyday Life class at the University of Kansas.

If the amendment passes, the University of Kansas' School of Social Welfare could lose $3.1 million, said Todd Cohen, university spokesman, earlier this week.

Iraq plans for postwar

Iraqis meet with U.S.

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqis met under American auspices to shape a new government Tuesday and said "the rule of law must be paramount" following Saddam Hussein's fall. In a war dividend, U.S. officials said they had taken Palestinian terrorist Abul Abbas into custody in Baghdad.

Four weeks after U.S.-led forces unleashed their assault,

President Bush promised to "liberate every corner" of Iraq and American troops hastened to redeem his pledge.

Marines solidified their grip on Tikrit, Saddam's hometown, and American officials said fighting had ended in Qaim, a town near the Syrian border.

Acting on a tip, commandos searching a home in Baghdad found a weapons cache with a sizable chemical laboratory and documents they said were instructions on making chemical and biological weapons. They also reported finding a bomb concealed inside a bottle, another in an umbrella and a third in a telephone.

The U.S.-organized meeting on a new government drew scores of Iraqis to a gold-colored tent erected in Ur — biblical birthplace of the Jewish patriarch Abraham — and anti-American protest in a nearby city.

"No to America and no to Saddam," chanted thousands of Shiite protesters in Nasiriyah, exercising their new freedom of speech to object to the imminent creation of an American interim governing authority.

Inside the meeting, White House envoy Zalmay

Khalilzad said the United States has "no interest, absolutely no interest, in ruling Iraq."

He added, "We want you to establish your own democratic system based on Iraqi traditions and values."

A 13-point statement released after the session envisioned a democratic country where "the rule of law is paramount." It said Saddam's "Baath party must be dissolved and its effects on society must be eliminated."

It wasn't immediately clear whether the paper was drafted by U.S. officials in advance of the meeting.

Fashion show displays international cultures

Ana Rocha McGuire wanted to show off her dress.

Although she had to drive seven and a half hours from her home in Minnesota, she was able to do just that — along with more than 50 other participants during the World Friendship Fashion Show on Tuesday night.

"It's just such a nice experience for ladies from Manhattan and around the world to learn about other cultures," McGuire said.

McGuire was involved with the World Friendship organization while her husband was a doctoral student at K-State. She participated in the fashion show last year, and decided to come again to display her dress, which displayed traditional Mexican culture.

The event was part of International Week, sponsored

Kemp case receives increased tips after crime show runs

By Heather Hollingsworth
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEAWOOD, Kan. — Ali Kemp's family won't let people forget about the pretty college student who was slain last summer at a swimming pool in this affluent Kansas City suburb.

Fresh tips are coming in after the family ran a half-page ad in USA Today on Thursday seeking help finding the 19-year-old's killer, and another ad is scheduled to run this week. "America's Most Wanted" repeated a segment on the killing Saturday, resulting in more tips from law enforcement agencies working similar cases.

"She was full of life, full of love, and she lived every minute," said Kemp's father, Roger Kemp, a businessman. "I told the people at USA Today that their paper wasn't big enough for me to tell them how wonderful Ali was."

Kemp, an honor student, was suffering from a severe head injury when she was found in June in the pump room of a neighborhood pool. She was working there as a pool attendant after finishing her freshman year at K-State, where she was a member of a sorority and majoring in mass communication.

Firefighters thought Kemp had a pulse when they arrived, but it was gone by the time a Med-Act ambulance crew arrived about two minutes later.

The case has attracted widespread media attention, resulting in more than 2,000 people calling the Crime Stoppers TIPS hot line with information. Fifteen of the tips arrived over the weekend after the recent surge of media publicity, said Jim Fitzgerald, assistant coordinator of the hot line that serves the Kansas City metro area.

Few, if any, cases have received more tips, he said. In comparison, the Precious Doe case — also a high-profile case — has drawn only about 500

BANTER AND BELLOW

Columnists decide clutter items reveal details about the prospective owners

Layton:

There is a difference between having a few knick-knacks and turning your home into a museum. Some who have crossed that line need your help in the fight against clutter. These include the following groups of people:

The Indiana Jonesers consist of those who have a deep appreciation for history, nature and rusty nails. These people may be geologists, anthropologists or farmers/stockmen. They will never move from where they currently reside, because they simply have too much stuff.

The dominant philosophy among members of this group is to make use of everything they happen upon. If you've ever met someone who owned a human skull other than their own, you've just had an encounter with an intensely clutter-addicted person. These people may try to convince you that without a single stone artifact, which they alone possess, nobody would ever have invented brownies.

The Garage Sale Leeches buy stuff just to buy stuff, usually not based on any practical need. Although some purchases can be awesomely rewarding, there is a fine line between useful tools and useless junk. Example: Buy a pickled baby at a garage sale and you will become a local legend and an official Leech.

Knick-Knack Whackers are commonly called "collectors." Their cult is based on the worship of Emilda Marcos. They have collections containing their respective addiction of choice numbering in the thousands. Once people have graduated from collecting baseball cards to hoarding crustified cats, we can all agree that authorities should be reached. Check your local listings.

Dana:

During my freshman year, I lived in the residence halls, and they called me The Everything Girl.

That's because I had it all.

I'm not talking about good looks or a charming personality (although one might say I'm blessed with such). I just had plain old stuff.

Question: What is the difference between clutter and collection?

You can e-mail Banter and Bellow columnists Dana Strongin, junior in print journalism, and Layton Ehmke, senior in print journalism, at banter@pub.ksu.edu.

Some clutter is useful. Think Polysporin, packing tape and mini sewing kits - minus the ability to remember how to replace a button.

But other clutter, it's more like junk. Think movie ticket stubs, old Halloween kitty-car headbands and photo albums I'll never bother to fill.

Although it's tempting and a damned relief to toss this stuff into the alley dumpster, that may not be the best choice.

For instance, someone who really wants to know what I'm like can just look into my room. Magazines and clipped newspaper articles tossed next to the bed indicate that I love a quick read with my late-night nightcap (or two).

I also have notes from classes piled all over the room. Some may be untouched, but hey, at least I cared enough to print them out.

And the random clothing items strewn all over the floor? Truly intelligent people know that layering is the dress style of choice in Kansas.

Who knows, too, when you might need some blue kitty ears? They've stood in as last-minute Halloween head decor for more than one night of October revelry.

Clutter is indeed a sign of a college student who, in her little free time, is too busy filling free pint glasses to clean her room.

If you dislike clutter, go alphabetize your spice rack and leave the shuffling up to the experts.

Mayor, city commissioners sworn in during meeting

Mayor Mark Taussig stands with his family following his inauguration at City Hall. Taussig served as a city commissioner prior to becoming the new mayor of Manhattan.

All items on general agenda passed at commission

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four people raised their right hands and repeated the city commission's oath of office at Tuesday evening's meeting, but only three were elected. Andrew Klimek participated in the swearing into office alongside his father, Ed Klimek. Ed Klimek, Bruce Snead and Mark Hatesohl were the three newly elected city commissioners. Following tradition, Mark Taussig was elected as the new mayor by the city commission for receiving the most votes in the 2001 election.

Then, the commission elected Brad Everett to be the mayor pro tem. Taussig said he could not speak for the other commissioners, but that he did not anticipate a significant shift in the course the commission has taken in the past two years.

"I want to keep Manhattan an affordable place to live," he said. "The future of Manhattan looks great, and I pray that, as mayor, I'll live up to the standards Manhattan deserves."

The agreement for design services for improvements on Anderson Avenue between Seth Child Road and Hylton Heights Road narrowly passed by commissioners with a 3-2 vote.

City Commission

The following items were passed at Tuesday evening's city commission meeting:

- A motion for the Anderson Avenue improvements between Seth Child Road and Hylton Heights Road carried with a 3-2 vote.
- A motion for the Kansas Department of Transportation federal aid safety grant for improvements to Westloop/Beechwood Terrace and Claflin intersection and the 12th Street and Bluemont Avenue intersection passed unanimously.
- A motion for the airport agreement with Heartland Aviation, Inc. passed unanimously.

which is 2,625 feet — carries 18,000 vehicles per day and is projected to carry 32,000 by 2020, said Jeff Hancock, city engineer.

From 1999 to 2002, there were 137 accidents along the proposed street improvement section on Anderson Avenue.

The construction cost with HWS Consulting Group, Inc. is estimated at about $1.12 million to Manhattan, Hancock said.

Commissioner Brad Everett voiced his concern with the plan proposing to pay clerical personnel $40.81 per hour.

A representative of HWS said the hourly wage included all of the indirect costs involved, that a secretary would not receive that total amount.

Everett also said he felt that the costs of expenses listed, including computer time at $6 per hour, were offensive.

"You have the right, but I feel offended as a taxpayer that you are sticking it to the community," he said.

When votes were counted, Everett voted in favor. Taussig and Hatesohl opposed the item.

Taussig, reiterating his intentions to keep Manhattan an affordable place to live, said he opposed the item because he felt the design fees needed to be renegotiated. He said if the city has to borrow money just to design it, not including construction costs, he didn't feel it was the course the city needed to take.

In addition, commissioners unanimously approved the Kansas Department of Transportation federal aid safety grant.

"Basically, it means the we're showing interest in pursuing the projects," Hancock said.

The projects include improvements on the intersections of Westloop/Beechwood Terrace and Claflin Road, and 12th Street and Bluemont Avenue.

Commissioners also unanimously approved the airport agreement with Heartland Aviation, Inc.

The agreement allows Heartland to continue to operate an airframe and power plant repair facility on the airport.

New federal policy regulates patient medical records, health information

By Jessica Packard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Getting medical patient information will be a little more difficult after new patient privacy rules went into effect Monday.

This new federal law will assure patients' medical privacy for the first time.

Such medical privacy rules were first proposed by the Clinton administration, but were not enacted until they were revised and passed by the Bush administration.

The new policy will be provided to patients, healthcare companies and providers to ensure patient information is kept confidential.

The rules will prohibit doctors and hospitals from giving out patient information to third parties for marketing purposes or to employers unless a patient specifically agrees.

Susanne Kufahl, assistant administrator for the Riley County Health Department, said the policy will be more beneficial for patients because it protects patients' privacy.

"The new policy will safeguard protective health information from casual access,"

she said.

Health care companies may not disclose information beyond what is minimally necessary to deliver care.

The law allows for "incidental" disclosures of information, but those covered by the rule are expected to put in place "reasonable safeguards" to protect private information.

Hospitals and doctors' offices will have to make the most significant changes to maintain patient privacy by adjusting patient boards and sign-in sheets.

Kufahl said the health department has been preparing for the new privacy policies since fall 2002.

"We've been working on fitting the regulations to our operations pretty seriously for a number of months," Kufahl said.

"However, I think once we get use to the change it may be better than before."

Wanda Parish, Dillons pharmacist, said pharmacies will have to keep more documentation of customers' signatures and requests for medical information.

"The paperwork will increase with requests for patient records and information for income taxes," Parish said.

"The beginning will be the biggest hurdle."

However, Parish said, the rules written within the new law are an extension of what has been incorporated within the companies.

"Most of the things in the policy we have already been doing," Parish said.

"Financial institutions have been providing information about such things for a while."

Lindy Gallaher, owner of Gallaher Insurance, also said the bill will not change the way she operates.

"I don't think it will make any difference," Gallaher said. "It's just another government regulation that defines what companies have already been doing."

However, as technology advanced, critics were concerned that once medical information was concentrated in electronic files, it could too easily land in the wrong hands.

Thus, Congress mandated that privacy rules be put into place.

"This policy ensures people that their medical information is protected," Kufahl said.

Manhattan schools update crisis plans due to Iraq war, create crisis team for assistance

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although the war in Iraq doesn't have USD 383 students practicing duck and cover drills, the school district does have a crisis plan that's been in place since 1999.

Michele Jones, communications coordinator, said the district is in the process of updating its plan both because of the war.

The district's current crisis plan has two avenues — one to evacuate, and one to shelter students in their respective buildings, Jones said.

If schools needed to evacuate for any reason, Jones said, each school has a designated evacuation site.

She said the plan includes buses to take students to the site and teachers who are responsible for checking various areas of the school to make sure all students are gone.

According to the plan, once at the site, students will only be released once it is safe, and only to their parents or legal guardians.

The plan for keeping students in their buildings includes locking doors and windows and taking precautionary measures until more information is issued and the situation becomes safe again.

Robert Seymour, associate superintendent of USD 383 schools, said its important to have plans like these in place because of all of the things that happen when a true crisis occurs.

"There are so many things going on that you have to have your plan thought out in advance so that you're able to coordinate with other agencies in the community and coordinate within your own organization," Seymour said.

Seymour said that during a crisis, communication is difficult because of jammed phone lines due to calls of concern about the crisis.

He said that because of this, a crisis plan is important so that little communication is needed to get students to safety.

"I can make one call and evacuate any school in the district because everyone else knows what to do once I make that call," he said.

"That's the kind of thing you have to plan in advance. We're doing the best we can to do that."

Jones said the school district created a National Crisis Team in October to deal with issues of going to war.

The team includes nurses, counselors, social workers and school psychologists.

She said the team developed ways to give staff and parents support.

The team also met with representatives from Fort Riley, who shared information about how to help students through a time of war.

They set guidelines as to what is appropriate for students to see about the war.

"They started getting the staff prepared. They came up with guidelines for things like 'Do you have your students watch TV all the time,' and decided what's appropriate for high school students compared to what's appropriate for second grade students," she said.

Jones said the team asked each school to make a list of students who are directly related to the military and to update it daily.

She said this would help the district give extra support to those students who are being affected by deployment or similar aspects of the war.

Say it with a personal.

TO THE POINT Governor should veto amendment revoking funds

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius should immediately veto an amendment which would allow the Kansas Legislature to revoke funding to higher education programs with curricula that could be considered obscene.

The legislation was written as a result of a University of Kansas professor's use of what some called explicit materials in his human sexuality class.

If the bill is approved, the Kansas Board of Regents would be forced to pull funding from university departments that violated the amendment. In KU's case, the school of social welfare would lose about $3.1 million.

If the legislature gains control of curriculum, the credibility of the school is threatened.

Legislators are taking away professors' freedom to choose how and what to teach based on their expertise. Professors have earned degrees through years of schooling, and they should be trusted to determine their own course materials.

The bill would deny students access to information that could be beneficial in their future careers.

It does not benefit students to censor information that can help them become competent in their fields of study, or to withhold knowledge that might help them make decisions in their personal lives.

Curriculum decisions are best left in the hands of the universities and individual departments, which are more familiar with their student populations.

University officials have the education of their students as their first priority, whereas state government representatives are guided by their political views and the complaints of their constituents.

If the state were to gain control of the university curriculum, it would have the power to abuse the notion of a fair education by setting limits on the education students receive.

College should be about amassing a wealth of information of different types, without government interference.

Vetoing the amendment would ensure that students of Kansas universities are prepared for careers when they graduate because they received comprehensive educations free of censorship.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

LEGAL CONTROL Hypocrisy of marijuana control forces ailing citizens to suffer when drug could provide cure

Taylor suffers from cancer. Her weekly chemotherapy treatments her body, and she is constantly battling nausea.

She has lost 20 pounds since beginning therapy, and her gaunt body has become a constant reminder of her growing despair. The medications Taylor is given help control the pain, but cause numerous side effects in the process.

There is a drug that would help control Taylor's nausea and promote weight gain.

But marijuana is illegal under any pretext in federal law.

Researchers debate whether marijuana is habit-forming, but do agree that it has not been proven that any individual has overdosed or died as a result of marijuana use.

Mandy wants to lose 10 pounds before her brother's wedding. She has spied a trendy little dress in the mall and has decided she has to have it.

So Mandy strolls into her local Wal-Mart to purchase a dietary supplement to make that 10 pounds come off a little faster. The dietary supplement Mandy has purchased contains the herb ephedrine.

Ephedrine, if taken in a large dose or over an extended period of time, can cause high blood pressure, heart attacks, strokes, seizures, psychosis, insomnia and heat stroke.

The hypocrisy of controlled and uncontrolled substances in legislation is wrong.

Allowing people to suffer because of the federal government's collective denial of the potential benefits of marijuana is unjust.

Eight states have legalized marijuana within their borders. However, individuals dispensing and using marijuana can still be prosecuted under federal law.

According to marijuana.org, U.S. lawmakers are currently launching an effort to allow defendants being prosecuted under federal law to inform juries that they were acting legally in their states.

Instead of finding ways to circumvent federal law, states need to push to legalize medicinal marijuana on a federal level.

Legalizing marijuana as a recreational drug — like alcohol — is questionable and is highly debated. However, medicinal marijuana should be given to patients who seek benefits from the drug. For people who suffer from AIDS, glaucoma, cancer, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy and chronic pain, marijuana can relieve debilitating symptoms.

If marijuana were legalized for medicinal use, it would come into question how the drug should be distributed. It is argued that people may abuse the drug by claiming to have illnesses which would require the use of marijuana.

However, don't all prescription drugs pose the threat of abuse?

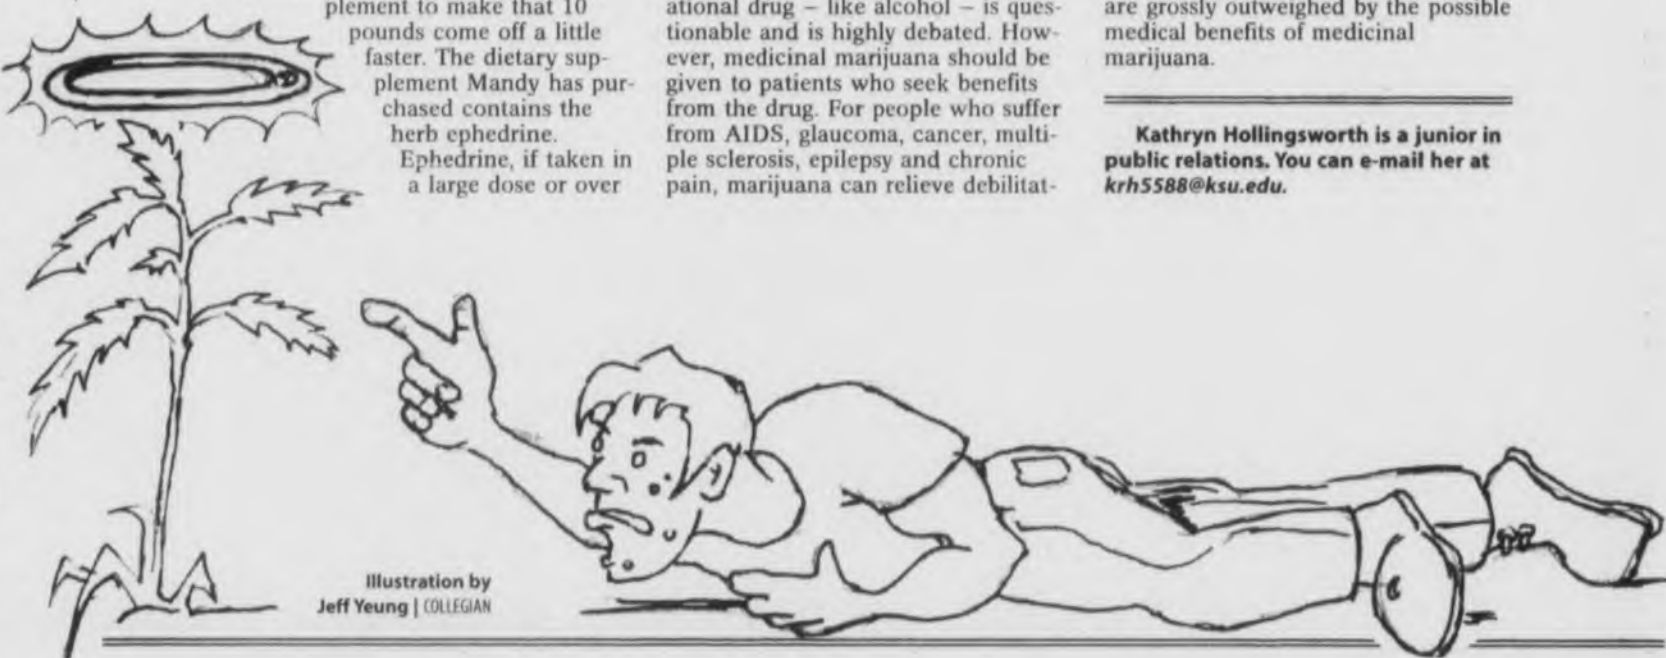

How can the government control a natural herb and refuse to give it to individuals who are suffering, yet allow stimulants such as ephedrine to remain uncontrolled by the Federal Drug Administration?

It is a biased policy that began in 1937 when marijuana was considered illegal and taken out of all forms of medication.

The legalization of marijuana and the policing of herbal dietary supplements would not be simple tasks. Would recreational marijuana use increase with the legalization of a medicinal supplement?

Possibly. Are the toxins in the smoke harmful to patients? Yes, if smoked in substantial amounts. But these challenges are grossly outweighed by the possible medical benefits of medicinal marijuana.

Newspaper jobs can be rewarding despite discomfort

Do you enjoy being underpaid? Do you like getting criticized and reviled by people you don't even know? Are fatigue and stress your closest friends? Do you want to overcome adversity? Do you want to make a difference in the way people look at the world?

If you answered any of those questions in the affirmative, you should consider applying for the fall Collegian staff.

Life in the newsroom can be one of the most rewarding things you will ever experience, but it's no sunny field of daisies. Take copy editing, for instance.

A standard Collegian copy shift entails a mind-numbing four hours of reading often-bland stories in order to catch errors and hopefully make the newspaper better. This job is boring at best and eye-gougingly awful at worst.

After about two hours, mistakes like confusion over "they're," "there" and "their" simply aren't funny anymore. In fact, they make you want to take your red pen and attack anyone within stabbing distance. In addition, you become convinced that people who write fragments and run-on sentences would benefit from nothing so much as an iMac "accidentally" dropped from a four-story window onto their heads.

And the pay is like a kick in the pants. After adjusting for taxes, copy editors make slightly less per hour than the toddlers in Kathy Lee Gifford's Indonesian sweatshops.

The worst part is that if you miss a single problem in the paper — even if you've caught a million mistakes — that's what everybody will see. This means you'll have to sit through your first class of the day hearing those two really loud, annoying English majors behind you talk about how the quality of the paper really has been slipping of late. Bastards.

Not a fan of copy editing? No problem. If you want a share in the immensely painful phenomenon that is the Internet (and all the computer-related stupidity that comes along with it), you should apply to work on the eCollegian, the online newspaper.

A typical E shift involves coming to the newsroom at an insanely late hour and then waiting an eternity for the copy editors to finish reading it. This normally requires a great deal of wondering why on earth those idiots aren't working faster and don't they know I have homework to do after I finish this and goshdangit I'm not going to get any sleep tonight. Again.

Finally, after everyone else has left the building, you work until your computer crashes. Then you scream at it in rage, reboot, and hope to all that is good and holy that your last save — the one that crashed the idiotic machine — went through.

Then you turn on Ben Folds' "Hold Me Closer, Tiny Dancer" while the computer is booting, and you try to relax and regain some semblance of sanity so you'll be able to function when the stupid computer finally finishes booting.

Rinse, lather, repeat, and you've got building the E in a nutshell. You finish at about 4 a.m. and stumble into bed at around 4:30, knowing in the back of your mind that you'll never make it to your 8:30 class. This is just as well, since you haven't done the assignment for that class anyway. As you drift off to Neverland, you curse humanity and its cruel stepchild, the Internet.

If computers aren't your bag, there are other jobs: reporter, designer, photographer and, of course, columnist. All of them involve pain. Deadlines, obstinate sources, harsh critics and technical difficulties make these roles tougher than most people realize.

If these jobs inhale so vigorously, why do the folks in the newsroom want them?

Because we love them. I've had more frustrations in the Collegian newsroom than just about anywhere else. But it's also been the scene of some of my greatest triumphs.

There's nothing like the feeling of leaving Kedzie Hall at midnight and knowing that you've put out a killer paper for tomorrow. Nothing compares to the thrill of seeing your byline next to the best story you've ever read. There's no rush like catching a huge mistake in a story and fixing it so we don't get sued.

If you think you've got what it takes to be a part of the fall Collegian, drop by Kedzie 103 before Friday and pick up an application.

Working in the newsroom has the potential to be the most painful thing you ever do. But I can guarantee that it will also be one of the most rewarding.

OK, it's about time for the dorms to turn their A/C's on.	I don't know about anyone else, but I'm rooting for North Carolina next year.	Thanks, UPC.	basketball.	Lewis Black was better. Whatever, UPC.
I hope all you KU fans cry yourselves to sleep tonight. Bye, bye, Roy.	You know why Kansas is so windy? Because Oklahoma blows and Nebraska sucks. That's all I have to say about that.	"CSI" is much better than watching Roy Williams crying.	I love John O'Hara's ears.	My dream one day is to be in Kansas State's Student Governing Association — while I'm married!
K-State basketball will now dominate the Big 12. Ah, eat it, KU.	I think Kramer's management could really use some guys.	I lost all respect for Roy Williams and Channel 13 news. Put something better on, like "CSI."	Hey, this message goes out to Paul Restivo. I'm sorry you're so jealous of John O'Hara. I mean, you need to grow up and deal with it, buddy. Sorry, he's just better-looking than you.	First Taco Bell. What's next? Burger King? Shame on you, Union.
Happy trails to Roy, baby. Hell, yeah. Get out of here.	A man who stands on stool is high on pot.	Yeah, I was wondering, since Taco Bell is moving out of the Union, if they could move into our house?	I just flew into town today from New York, and boy are O'Hara's ears tired.	I wonder if Tammy Jo is going to get a DUI now.
You think the baseball team would do any better if they had a pep band?	Nothing gives me more joy than watching Roy Williams cry. Cry me a river, Roy.	The Bush administration says they're going to continue looking for top Iraqi officials. Hope they have better luck finding them than they have Osama bin Laden.	I just want to thank students at Kansas State and Union Programming Council for enriching my life here by bringing an excellent comedian like Darrell Hammond. Thank you.	Angie Goodson. Cancer research center appoints new director

New leader to replace center's late founder

By Kelli Pitman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rob Denell, distinguished professor of biology, plans to continue the goals of Terry C. Johnson, the founder and former director of the center who died in November 2002, when he assumes the role as the new director of the Terry C. Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research.

The center was founded in the early 1980s by Johnson, who served as the director until last fall.

Since then, Steve White, interim dean of arts and sciences, has served as the acting director while a search committee looked for a new director to take over.

Three weeks ago, Denell was named the new director of the center. Denell has his doctorate in genetics from the University of Texas.

He also has administrative roles in the Department of Biology.

"We are incredibly fortunate to have him take on the role of director," White said. "He has a great combination of administrative and research experience and outstanding leadership skills."

As director of the center, Denell has many new job responsibilities.

Previously, his time was split among active research, administrative duties and teaching genetics and biology classes.

Now he spends half of his time in the Cancer Center, and the other half is spent continuing his research and fulfilling his administrative responsibilities in the Department of Biology.

"At the center, I spend more time interacting with the scitists to help continue to promote cancer research," Denell said.

Denell said the center is dedicated to conquering cancer in three main ways.

First, the center fosters research in a number of ways in many labs on campus. The goal is to help the biology, biochemistry and veterinary labs as much as possible with their work with cancer.

Second, it fosters cancer-related training for graduate and undergraduate students.

Finally, it focuses on outreach to the public and other cancer organizations.

"The mission statement and goals that the center has are wonderfully stated, and I am entirely committed to following them," Denell said.

Denell was selected as the new director by a committee that was headed by the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The university did a competitive internal search and interviewed several candidates.

"He has a whole mix of characteristics that we were looking for," White said. "And his experience with cancer gave him a sense of understanding of the disease."

Both Denell and his wife, Mardi, are cancer survivors.

Speaker to discuss drugs, violence

Ex-gang member to speak to high school students

Gangs, drugs, violence and crime in Manhattan?

Many residents may scoff at the thought of violence in Manhattan, but area officials said residents need to take precautions.

"I think there is more of a problem in Manhattan than we want to recognize," said Starla Bocanegra, coordinator of Youth As Resources with the Regional Prevention Center in Manhattan.

The Manhattan Area Risk Prevention Coalition also recognizes the problem and is sponsoring a motivational speech at 8 p.m. Thursday in the Manhattan High School East Campus auditorium.

The speaker is Alex Correa, a nationally known motivational speaker.

"He is the best speaker I have ever heard. He spoke to an audience of 500 adults and there weren't many not crying," Bocanegra said.

"His message hits home, and it affects us all personally."

Correa uses his speech time to tell his personal story of drug addiction, violence and homelessness as well as his battle to get his life together again.

Matt Roots, Manhattan High School drug and alcohol prevention coordinator, said he especially wants high school students to get positive messages from Correa's speech.

"I would like the students to attend because sometimes youth get a negative picture painted of them in society, and here is an opportunity to see an individual who had a rough life and chose to make it positive," Roots said.

Bocanegra said she hopes community members will pull messages from Correa's speech as well.

"Hearing from a person with first-hand experience lets us know that it does happen to our youth all around us. It's right here," she said.

Roots said that by the age of 14, Correa was a homeless gang member in Chicago whose life involved drugs, violence and crime.

Correa managed to turn his life around after stints in juvenile detention and prison and now owns a business and travels around the country giving motivational speeches, he said.

"This hits home that there is a problem and now we can do something about it," Bocanegra said.

The speech is funded by the City of Manhattan from special alcohol funds.

"This speaks to the community and is for everybody," Bocanegra said.

"It speaks to the youth and to the average person to show how they can make a huge difference in someone's life."

Officials suspect 2nd SARS case in Kansas

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — A second suspected case of a contagious respiratory illness has been identified in Kansas.

The latest case involves a woman in northeast Kansas who recently traveled to Asia, the state Department of Health and Environment announced Tuesday.

The woman was never hospitalized and has apparently recovered, KDHE said. The agency did not release her name.

SARS — severe acute respiratory syndrome — was recently discovered in southeast Asia. It is thought to be caused by a previously unrecognized coronavirus, the same type of virus that causes common colds. It is most likely spread the same way colds are spread.

Symptoms of SARS include fever, shortness of breath, coughing, chills and body aches.

More than 150 deaths have been reported worldwide. There have been more than 190 suspected cases in the United States but no known deaths.

A south-central Kansas man was previously identified as the first suspected case of SARS in the state. He was hospitalized but has recovered.

Samples from both people have been sent to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention for testing, KDHE said.

Crash prevents tennis match

Nebraska team sustains injuries

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fatal two-vehicle crash involving the University of Nebraska's women's tennis team and a Wymore, Neb., teenager forced the postponement of a K-State Big 12 tennis match Tuesday morning.

According to a police report, Justin L. Ankersen, 17, was killed after his vehicle collided with a charter bus carrying Husker Coach Scott Jacobson, an assistant and eight members of Nebraska's women's tennis team.

Injuries to the team were limited to "minor bumps and bruises," according to the report.

The incident occurred on U.S. Highway 77 about three miles south of Beatrice, Neb., when Ankersen's Buick LeSabre crossed the center line and collided nearly head-on with the bus.

"We are very grateful that our women's tennis family walked away from this accident," Jacobson said in a statement released Tuesday evening through Nebraska's sports information office. "Our immediate thoughts and prayers are with the family of the young man who lost his life in this tragedy."

Following the crash, the team returned to Lincoln aboard a different bus.

"On behalf of the University of Nebraska athletic department, we offer our sincere condolences to the family and friends of the young man who lost his life," Nebraska Athletics Director Steve Pederson said in the statement.

According to the Beatrice Daily Sun, Ankersen was a junior at Wymore Southern High School. He had two siblings in the school system — a sister who is a freshman and a brother in elementary school.

Officials with K-State tennis did not learn of the incident until Tuesday morning. The decision to postpone the match came around 10 a.m.

Rescheduling the competition, which originally was to begin at 2 p.m. Tuesday, is an option, but Nebraska also could concede the match.

"We are waiting on Nebraska. Right now, that match would have implications toward the Big 12 tournament seedings," K-State Assistant Sports Information Director Michele Dubert said.

"It's up to them. If they don't play it, it doesn't have any impact on them as far as seeding for the tournament."

The No. 34 Wildcats will play No. 30 Texas A&M on Friday and No. 33 Texas on Saturday in Manhattan before competing in the Big 12 tournament, April 24-27 in Kansas City, Mo.

K-State Coach Steve Bietau refused to comment when contacted by the Collegian on Tuesday.

MLB | Fan tackles umpire at Royals game
Umpire Laz Diaz was attacked by a fan who came out of the stands in an eerie reminder of what happened near the same spot last season at Comiskey Park during Tuesday's Royals-White Sox game.

"I'm physically OK," Diaz said after the Royals won 8-5. "I think you should talk to the other guy and see how he's feeling."

Immediately after Carlos Lee fled out to end Chicago's eighth inning, a man ran on the field and tried to tackle Diaz, wrapping his arms around the first base umpire's legs.

Security and players rushed to the aid of the 30-year-old Diaz, who served in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve. The fan was quickly taken away.

"He is someone we consider a rising star, and rather than let someone else catch this rising star, we decided, 'Let's get him for Western,'" athletic director Wood Selig said.

The 30-year-old Horn replaces Dennis Felton, who left to become coach at Georgia last week after five seasons.

The University of Illinois thought enough of Self to reward him in December with a contract extension that will pay him $5 million if he stays all five years.

Rivalry might be in Cats' future

JOEL REICHENBERGER

Last week I argued that K-State and KU should not let a fun rivalry die out.

But with each school in overdrive in their sport of strength, finding a prime-time topic to bicker over appeared to be a far-off dream.

Christmas came early. The Jayhawks endured their second straight disastrous Monday as Roy Williams announced he was leaving for North Carolina.

The ripples reverberating from Williams' splash will be felt all over the Big 12, but nowhere stronger than right here in Manhattan.

For K-State basketball, it couldn't have come at a better time, either.

Jim Wooldridge has been engineering a turnaround in the recesses of Bramlage Coliseum. While the progress has been slow, this year's recruiting class represents a major leap forward.

It has been ranked in the Top 10 and was even notched as the best in the nation by Hoop Scoop Magazine.

The class is highlighted by four incoming freshmen — a relief given the junior college influx that Wooldridge has had to survive on recently.

It could be a tremendous opportunity for Wooldridge and his Wildcats, and could do wonders for the competitiveness of the K-State — KU rivalry.

But pulling closer to the Hawks won't be easy. Williams' leaving Kansas won't destroy the Hawks' rich tradition, and it won't kill their basketball program. He did too fine a job building it for that to happen.

It will set the Hawks back two or three years, though.

A new coach, even a top-tier one, won't come in and find immediate success playing in a tough, unfamiliar conference.

Williams knew the Big 12 like ex-Kansas athletic director Al Bohl knows the unemployment line. A new coach won't have that luxury.

Right now, nearly every piece of KU's prized recruiting class has to question if it still wants to go to Lawrence.

Even Keith Langford, who made it clear he was the future of Jayhawk basketball with his stellar NCAA tournament, hinted that he might follow his coach eastward.

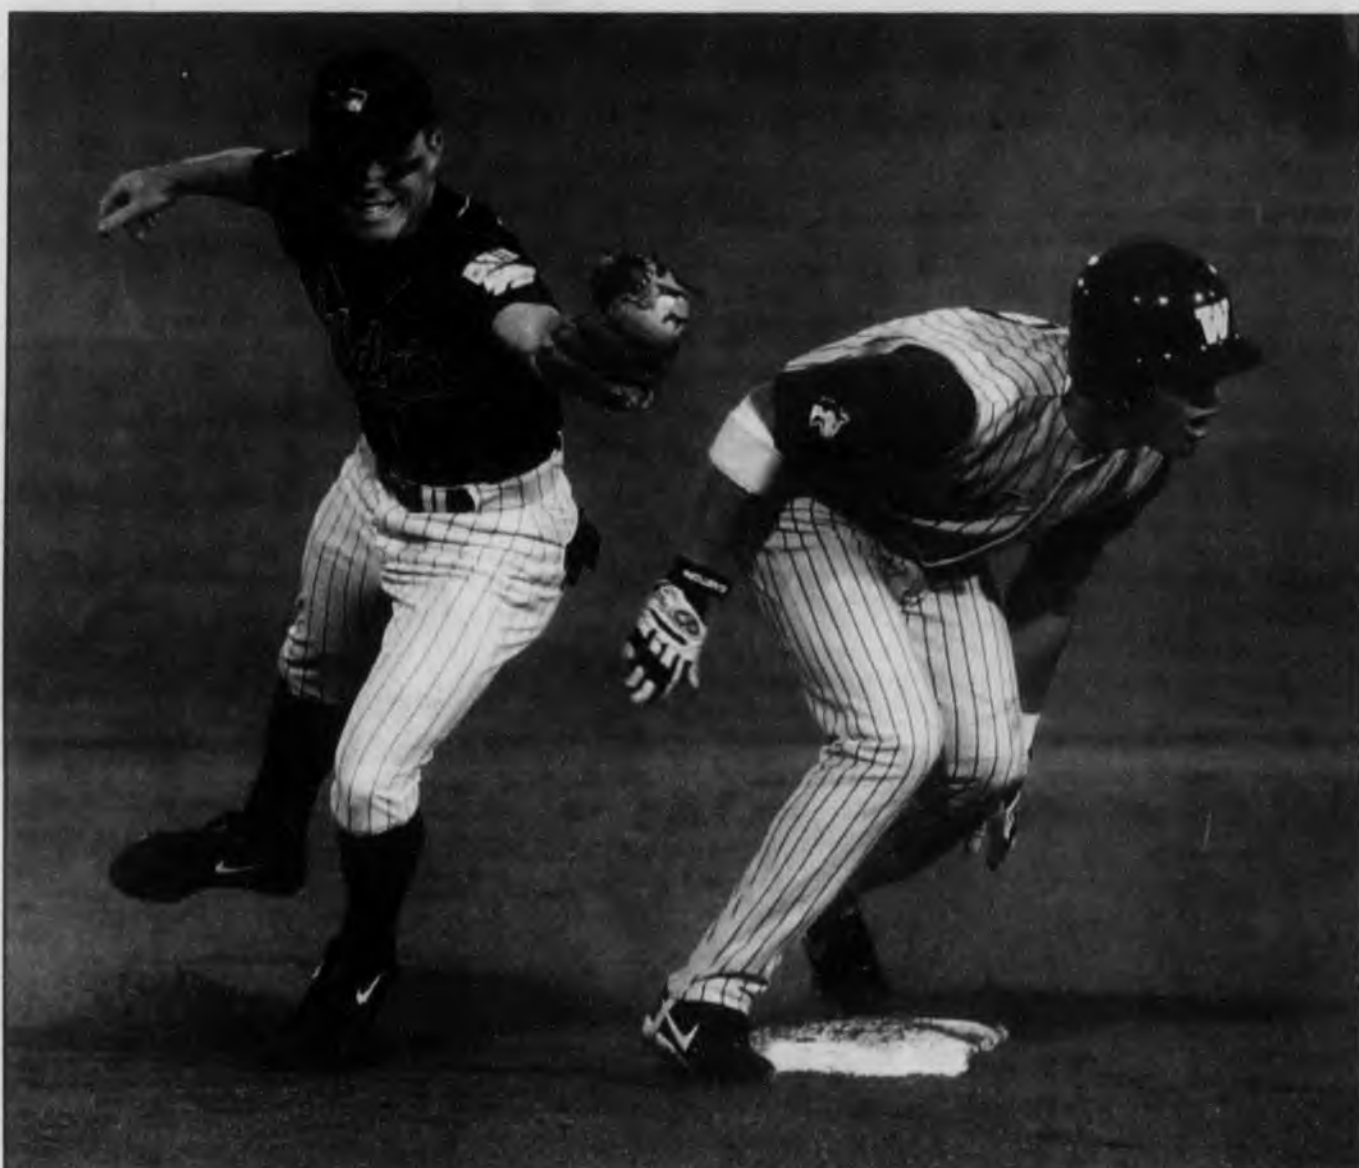

This is just the crack in the door that K-State needed. KU has had a tremendous run over the last several years, but it is bound to come to a halt now.

While KU regroup and retools, Wooldridge needs to get a foot in the door.

The time is now, and the opportunity can't be passed. The Cats need to close the gap in basketball.

K-State's slide reaches 16 after 14-5 thrashing

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State spent Tuesday afternoon watching the skies for signs of rain.

The storm would come eventually, but only trace amounts of precipitation fell on Frank Myers Field.

Rather, the thunder came courtesy of Washington's bats, as the Huskies (23-12) extended K-State's school-record losing streak to 16 games by pounding the Wildcats (10-24) 14-5 in the first of a two-game set at Tointon Family Stadium.

The stretch counts as the longest current losing streak in Division 1 and is one loss shy of the longest this season. Maryland-Eastern Shore owns that mark after beginning the year 0-17.

K-State was plagued again by tough luck from the mound.

Infield vacancy emerges as Cats' latest in series of headaches

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If anything else could go wrong for Coach Mike Clark's team, it did last weekend.

Two more players were bitten by the injury bug before Tuesday's game, which resulted in a 14-5 loss to Washington.

All-Big 12 third baseman Ty Soto was diagnosed with a fractured wrist Monday. Junior Brad Anzman, penciled to start Tuesday in center field against the Huskies, was struck in the head with a ball during pregame warmups.

Anzman has a minor concussion and should be back this weekend. Soto, however, isn't as lucky. He is out for the rest of the season.

In the midst of what is now a 16-game slide, Clark summoned Soto to try and motivate the team.

"I had specifically Ty talk to them, because I thought that would shake them up," Clark said. "He had a really nice talk with them — how they have to keep going for him and how they have to keep fighting for him. When that didn't work, what do you say?"

Soto, in his third year at K-State, has been a leader on and off the field for the Cats. That made it all the tougher for Clark to swallow Soto's injury.

"He's one of the greatest kids there is on Earth," he said. "I'm just sick to my stomach. We cried together yesterday when we first found out. He means a lot, not just to the program, but to Kansas State."

"Those are the types of kids you want representing your baseball program," Clark said. "Those are the types of kids you want representing Kansas State. He's a great kid. It's not what we needed right now, but it's an opportunity for some other guys to step up."

Guys like junior Zack Saunders and redshirt freshman Andrew Dunsmore.

"Saunders did a couple of really good things for us," Clark said. "Maybe we can get Zack going now and he can have a nice end to the season

Museum to showcase Oz

Exhibit to display Wizard of Oz memorabilia

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dorothy may not be in Kansas anymore, but thousands of "Wizard of Oz" enthusiasts will be following the yellow brick road to Wamego this summer.

The Marvelous Land of Oz, a 6,000-square-foot museum along Wamego's Main Street, will open sometime this summer, said Clark Balderson, chairman of the Oz organizing group of The Columbian Theatre Foundation – the group developing the project.

"It will be featuring literally thousands of 'Wizard of Oz' collectibles, documents and memorabilia, starting with the publication of the first book in 1900 through the present," he said.

"It will be one of the largest, if not the largest, public display of Oz artifacts in the world. There are larger collections, but to our knowledge, they are in private hands and private displays."

Balderson said developers got the idea for the museum after sponsoring a smaller Oz exhibit at the The Columbian Theatre, Museum and Art Center in the summer 1995. He said the exhibit was very popular, with about 20,000 paid admissions.

The group applied for a state grant in 2002 and were successful in receiving a $100,000 tourism attraction grant.

"With that commitment and other funds raised locally, we started down the path of executing our plans," he said.

Balderson said the project will cost about $450,000 for renovations, designs and other expenses. He said modification of the building, built in the 1880s, began in mid-January and is reaching completion.

"Frank Baum wrote 'The Wonderful Wizard of Oz' while he lived in Aberdeen, S.D., and owned a mercantile store," he said.

"So we wanted the museum to be located in a typical 1900 Kansas mercantile store. It emulates the time when he wrote

"We think it will appeal to everyone from kids age four to five to their great-grandparents in their 80s."

the book."

However, no museum is complete without a collection of artifacts.

That's where Tod Machin, 1985 K-State graduate in drawing and print making, is contributing to the project.

Machin, now the marketing art director for the New Theatre Restaurant in Overland Park, Kan., began collecting Wizard of Oz artifacts while writing a paper for a history of costume class. Machin said he collected books, silent films, the motion picture, cartoons, spin-off movies, TV shows, toys and anything related to the story.

"It's really very interesting to see how this one little story has survived for more than 100 years and been adapted to each new media and embraced by each new generation," he said.

"Its message is obviously timeless."

Machin said he stopped collecting because of space constraints. He said he boxed everything up and put it into storage.

"The collection can come out of hibernation and be on display for people to enjoy," he said.

Besides entertainment, the museum will help boost the local economy, Balderson said.

He said officials are estimating about 45,000 visitors per year with adult tickets under $10 and children's tickets under $6.

"We have a motel under construction, probably as a direct result of this," he said. "We're expecting that to open the first part of August."

Balderson said the Kansas Legislature designated Kansas Highway 99 as "The Road to Oz" on April 3.

He said he is expecting many visitors.

"We think it will appeal to everyone from kids age four to five to their great-grandparents in their 80s," he said.

"It's a 103-year-old story embedded in our culture. It's the most important American fairy tale and is one of the most recognized cultural creations in the world."

For Machin, the museum opening will be like coming home.

"What better place for an Oz museum than in a small Kansas community? And not just any Kansas community, but my hometown," he said. "As we all know – there's no place like home."

Meth lab inspections lead to arrests

By Curt Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – U.S. and Canadian officials said Tuesday they had disrupted a major methamphetamine supply system through an investigation that netted 67 arrests and tons of illegal chemicals.

Many of the alleged brokers, money launderers and go-betweens were of Middle Eastern origin, including one New York man whose uncle was recently arrested on charges of being a member of the Islamic Jihad terrorist group.

Much of the money was funneled to Amman, Jordan, and the West Bank cities of Nablus and Ramallah.

Assistant Attorney General Michael Chertoff, said investigation would continue into the money trail.

"We're always interested in following the money and seeing where the money goes," Chertoff said at a news conference at Drug Enforcement Administration headquarters.

The 18-month investigation, dubbed "Operation North Star," centered on the shipment of pseudoephedrine – a common nasal decongestant that is a key ingredient in methamphetamine – from three Canadian companies to labs in the Southwestern United States.

The charges were brought Tuesday in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago, as well as cases brought in Canada. Among those charged are six current or former executives with three Canadian companies who allegedly diverted thousands of pounds of pseudoephedrine to the United States for illegal use.

What people weren't looking for on the first Easter.

Instead people were searching for the body of Jesus of Nazareth. A man who claimed to be God. A man who said he would prove his deity by bodily rising from the dead. No other religious leader has made such a claim and backed it up with such an event. For an article that gives the reasons that Jesus really is God and wants to have a relationship with you, see the feature article "Beyond Blind Faith" on the Web at EveryStudent.com.

in each of his three innings before being chased in the fourth after walking Taylor Johnson to begin the frame.

"It's just one of those things where he makes enough mistakes that when they get a baserunner, it's almost impossible to keep them out of scoring position," Coach Mike Clark said.

Brite uncorked a wild pitch in each inning to foreshadow the long night ahead, but the Cats' struggles weren't limited to pitching. Catcher Josh Heinrich posted two passed balls, and K-State turned in three fielding errors in an effort Clark tagged "unemotional."

"I was not happy with the way we came out," Clark said. "I said after infield with the coaches, 'We're not ready!'"

Things got worse in the fourth.

Lefty Brett Bagley relieved Brite with one on and no outs in the frame, but the Huskies wouldn't let up, greeting the junior with four home runs in five plate appearances to push the lead to 10-0.

Washington freshman Brent Lillibridge started the carnage with a booming shot to straight-away center field, then added another longball in the seventh off Andrew Ehling.

The Wildcats didn't seem prepared at the plate, either.

Washington starter Josh Conover (2-0) worked his way through K-State's batting order with ease through four innings before stumbling in the fifth.

After retiring five straight Wildcats, Conover surrendered a double to K-State shortstop Brett Williams to begin the fifth. The Cats were on the board two pitches later when third baseman Zack Saunders' second home run of the season cleared the left field wall to cut the margin to eight.

Williams' second homer of the year added two more K-State runs in the seventh to tarnish Conover's (2-0) gem further, but the sophomore was otherwise solid in earning the win. Husky closer Jamie Hawkins gave up one hit and one run in two innings of relief.

Clark conducted a boisterous 30-minute, closed-door meeting after the game to address his concerns before today's series finale. First pitch is set for noon.

"I wanted to get their attention," he said. "I think they'll be ready to play, and those who aren't will probably be out of uniform from this point on."

The forecast: a good chance for rain.

"I've given every talk I can give. I've chastised them, punished them, patted them on the back, and that's what the talk tonight was about," Clark said.

"I said it's time to get in the mirror and look at yourself and ask yourself, 'Am I doing everything I can to help this team win?' And I said, 'Unfortunately, 99 percent of you guys have to answer no.'"

Washington's Brent Lillibridge thanks a higher source after hitting his second home run against K-State Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. The Huskies hit 5 home runs en route to a 14-5 win over the Wildcats.

FASHION | Cultural event showcases international clothing

by the International Coordinating Council.

The fashion show was started as a way for women to share their culture through dress, said Maria Beebe, treasurer of World Friendship and director of the International Student Center.

The show was a great success last year, Beebe said, and the organization decided to continue it this year. Food from many of the cultures was also available following the fashion show.

Beebe said the event was so large last year that the decision was made to move it from the International Student Center to a larger venue, the First Lutheran Church on Poyntz Avenue.

McGuire said she agreed that the event had grown tremendously.

"It's a great opportunity in a university town to be able to learn about other cultures," McGuire said. "You don't have to travel abroad because there is so much to learn right here."

Susan Larson, junior in elementary education, said she attended the fashion show because she enjoys learning about and interacting with people from other cultures.

Larson spent a summer in China, which she said opened her eyes to different cultures.

Attending the fashion show was another extension of her desire to learn more, she said.

"It's fascinating to see the differences from country to country," Larson said. "It helps me see a lot bigger picture of the world than just what's right here around me."

Natalya Sidorovskaya, graduate student in business, is a native of Russia. She said she was glad to be able to represent her culture, but also for the opportunity to learn more about other cultures.

"It's a great thing that you guys in the U.S. have so many cultures to learn from, and that you want to learn from them," she said.

The purpose of the World Friendship organization, Beebe said, is to help ease the transition of international women into American culture. The group is comprised of American and international women who meet once a week.

It was McGuire's involvement with World Friendship that helped her decide to drive to Manhattan for the fashion show. She said her involvement with the group was a great help during her time in Manhattan.

The group helped connect McGuire with women who had similar interests, she said, and helped her make friends.

She said she was glad to be able to make it back for the fashion show and visit other members of the group.

"It's just refreshing to see the friends I left here," she said.

McGuire said she enjoyed the fashion show so much that she probably would make the long journey again to attend next year.

"Maybe with a different dress," she said.

GREEK AFFAIRS | Committees to offer guidance

Both assistants will contribute additional aid around the office and work directly with the two main greek councils.

"The graduate assistants will offer extra help with advising," Goodson said. "The positions will also offer leadership opportunities for the graduate students within our office. One will work directly with the Panhellenic Council and the other with the Interfraternity Council."

A research committee is also in the works to look at different advising styles from other schools.

"The research committee is designed to look at the best advising practices across the country," Rundle said. "This will help offer the best greek experience for our members by reviewing what other schools are doing."

Sarah McCaffrey, outgoing Panhellenic president, said the research committee will also benefit greek members.

"The committee will enable us to research other universities and see what other options are out there for us," McCaffrey, senior in mass communications, said.

An alumni committee is also being developed to help keep concurrence with the executive councils.

"The alumni committee will help give us guidance and consistency of opinions," McCaffrey said.

With the new additions, Goodson said she hopes to continue her work for the greek system.

"I just hope to continue being an advocate for all our programs," Goodson said.

PROFESSOR | Faculty supports academic freedom

Other universities, including K-State, would have to follow suit or face similar penalties – and that has K-State faculty members concerned.

Faculty Senate President Al Cochran said Faculty Senate approved and sent an open letter to Sebelius last week requesting a line item veto.

"Human sexuality classes are relevant. That's the first major point," Cochran said of the letter. "The amendment bypasses the definition of obscene material, leading to the conclusion that Kansas law already addresses the obscenity issue."

The letter said "the amendment is ill-conceived and would harm the quality of education at Kansas Regents' institutions," and refers to the amendment as an interference with faculty members' academic freedom and an obstruction of "legitimate and relevant educational experiences." The letter also refers to the current law as adequate and cites the existing definition of "obscene."

"It would have the potential to impact the courses we teach in the same way that it would impact the courses that KU teachers or anyone else teach," he said.

Faculty senator Mary Beth Kirkham said most Faculty Senate leaders voted to approve the open letter.

"I think this is going to have some big repercussions on faculty freedom and what the professors can show," she said.

Michael Smith, associate professor of political science, agreed.

"Academic freedom is what propels important new research, challenges students, and even underlies the study of the state legislature itself," he said. "I have been treated warmly and welcomed by legislators in both states, and on both sides of the aisle, yet the research I do cannot continue in this environment in which the legislators insist on using the budget as a lever to control professors' research and teaching."

Smith said the amendment would hurt educational quality.

"The USA has the greatest system of higher education in the world because we combine state support with academic freedom," he said.

The trend could put academic decisions in the hands of legislators, Smith said.

"(Wagle's) intent is to force a professor to change the way he teaches a certain course by using the budget as a hammer," he said. "If passed, this amendment injects the legislature into all sorts of curriculum decisions traditionally made by the universities, departments or individual professors."

Jen Rae Hein, senior in advertising and strategic communications at KU, is enrolled in Dailey's class – the course targeted by Wagle's amendment. Hein, along with two other KU students, spoke with the governor's chief advisory committee this week about the course's allegedly obscene content.

Hein said that during her six years at KU, the class has consistently filled the 500-seat lecture hall. She said she has not witnessed anything obscene while attending class.

"They've passed a bill that is labeling a class to be obscene and pornographic, but to be obscene, it must meet three qualifications," she said. "The only thing I would think is obscene is the fact that Sen. Wagle got away with this. Not a single one of these people have sat in the classroom. None of these people have seen the slide show or videos. It's shameful what's happening."

The amendment would cut program funding and set a dangerous precedent, Hein said.

"It gives them jurisdiction over classroom content," she said. "That hurts K-State as much as it hurts us. How are we going to recruit the top faculty if they think they're going to be on constant fire from the government?"

Hein said avenues are available within the university if students wish to file a complaint – and that should be enough.

"Hubble is to NASA as Wagle is to Kansas. Although we, as educated citizens, hold the keys to greatness, someone seems to have their lens on backwards," she said. "Luckily, the governor has the tools to continue to lead Kansas on this quest for truth-seeking and justice."

KEMP | Crime show brings tips, attention to case

tips. Precious Doe was the name given to the girl whose decapitated body was discovered in April 2001 in Kansas City about five miles southeast of downtown.

"This is one that has kind of touched the whole community," Fitzgerald said. "The longevity of this is amazing. It happened on the 18th of June, and we've gotten calls every day."

After repeating a segment on Kemp's killing on "America's Most Wanted" during the weekend, there were 149 calls to the show's crime center, said Avery Mann, a spokesman for the show. When "America's Most Wanted" first profiled the case in August, about 300 people phoned with tips, Mann said.

The case, he said, is among those drawing the largest number of responses in the show's history.

"You have a number of elements" that contributed to the large response, he said. "The fact it's a woman. The fact it's a young woman. It happened in a nice area of town, and there is not a suspect – just a suspect description. "It's a mystery as well as a sad crime. And we have presented to our viewers a lot of clues." Authorities also attribute part of the attention to the tenacity of Kemp's family.

The family has offered a $50,000 reward for tips that lead to the arrest of her killer. A scholarship fund in Kemp's honor now totals more than $100,000 and continues to grow, said Mar-ga Spangler, vice president of Gold Bank in Leawood.

When Kemp's father, Roger Kemp, approached Lamar Advertising of Kansas City to find out how much it would cost to advertise on a billboard, the outdoor advertiser agreed to put up three signs for free. They've been up about six weeks in the Kansas City metro area and will remain posted until Kemp's killer is found, said Brian Henry, the advertiser's creative director.

"He's such a passionate guy," Henry said of Roger Kemp and the reason the company became involved. "You kind of just feel his pain and sorrow, and you just have to admire his strength to keep this going."

But not everything is free.

Roger Kemp would not say how much it cost to buy the ads in USA Today. The newspaper's standard rate for such an ad is $47,500, but Kemp said he paid much less, partly because he was taking out two ads.

"If we catch this predator, we don't care what it costs," Roger Kemp said. "It will be worth every penny."

Maj. Craig Hill of the Leawood Police Department said he is "very comfortable that we will bring closure to this case. We just have to find the right lead."

But he said it may take some time. Even if the department fails to get another lead, he said, the number of tips that have been received would be enough to keep the six-man squad assigned to the case busy for the next 14 months.

"This is a unique case," he said. "You've got to understand that cases take a long time if you don't have a smoking gun."

Hill said once the department gets the clue it needs, it will be easy to link Kemp's killer to the crime due to physical evidence at the scene.

Authorities have not said whether Kemp was raped. But, Hill said, "generally the motive of a crime of this nature is sexual assault."

Abbas, the leader of a Palestinian group that killed an American on the hijacked cruise liner Achille Lauro in 1985, was captured by U.S. commandos on Monday, U.S. officials disclosed.

A number of his associates also were detained during raids at several sites around Baghdad, these officials said on condition of anonymity.

Abbas, whose name actually is Mohammed Abbas, led a faction of the Palestine Liberation Front, a Palestinian splinter group. His faction was in Tunisia until the attack on the Achille Lauro, after which it relocated to Iraq.

Leon Klinghoffer, an elderly American, was shot and tossed overboard in his wheelchair.

There was no major combat during the day, but at least 10 Iraqis were reported killed and 16 injured in a clash between U.S. Marines and a stone-throwing crowd in Mosul in northern Iraq. The New York Times reported on its Web site. The U.S. Central Command in the Persian Gulf said it could not confirm the report.

Central Command reported a Marine was shot to death in Baghdad by a member of his unit who mistook him for an Iraqi soldier.

While anti-American sentiment flared in Iraq, U.S. forces also won cooperation from civilians eager to restore order and vital services.

REMINDING THE MEMORY

Improvement techniques can assist students

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyone has a memory lapse from time to time.

Everyone has a memory lapse from time to time.

One of the toughest responsibilities of college students is remembering facts in class. There isn't one specific part of the brain that controls memory, so there can be many reasons why students forget facts, Jerome Frieman, professor of psychology, said.

"People can have poor memory," Frieman said. "That doesn't mean there is just one cause."

"People can be tired and not remember. Of course that's more temporary. And it can be because of some brain damage or other neurological problems that are more permanent."

There are two main learning disabilities that are associated with memory, Frieman said. He said people could have poor auditory memory, where they don't remember what was said, and poor visual memory, where it is difficult to remember what they saw.

He said if people have a trouble with either of those parts of their memory, they should develop processes to help them remember. One process is taking notes, then rewriting them. This is also known as rehearsal, Frieman said.

"If you have bad auditory memory you need to use your visual memory to compensate," Frieman said. "One way is taking notes and trying to focus in on what is being said. One thing that aids your memory is rehearsal."

If you forget something, it's because it might not be processed yet."

He said study environment and conditions can be essential to learning and remembering facts.

Nutrition can play an important factor in how one remembers information, said Mary Meck Higgins, human nutrition specialist and assistant professor with K-State research and extension. She said semi-starvation diets can affect your concentration.

"Your diet can affect you in a lot of ways," Higgins said. "Blood sugar needs to be circulating to make your brain work well. If you have low blood sugar, it can create several problems, which aren't all linked to memory."

She said foods rich in antioxidants like iron and vitamins C and E can help your brain do better, and decrease some of the aging processes, like memory loss.

There are no foods that you can add to your diet to specifically improve memory, Higgins said.

She said that items like ginkgo biloba are controversial and could be unsafe.

"You have to think of the brain as being another organ of the body," Higgins said. "If you aren't nourished, then it won't function as well, like the rest of your body."

"If you eat fruits with deep colors and grains with more antioxidants, the more beneficial it is to your body and brain functions."

Another reason why people can't remember certain information is because they don't store the facts right, Richard Harris, professor of psychology, said. He said that there can also be retrieval error — as far as accessing information.

"Things are easier to remember when they are meaningful or if you're more interested in it," he said. "Learning more efficient ways to encode information, and the more connections you make to material, the easier it is to remember."

"That's why it is so hard to learn in a class you know nothing about, because you have nothing to attach the new information to. So it's important to learn the beginning stuff, then build and associate things to that."

Harris said some people can remember faces and sports trivia, while some people might be able to tell you what you were wearing five years ago. He said that is due to relating things.

"It's important to relate things," Harris said. "Like an actor in a play, it is easy if one knows what's really going on or how it all fits together. But if you just tried to memorize lines and had no connection to anything, it would be very hard."

Students with learning disabilities concerning their memory can use different strategies when they study, said Andrea Blair, Learning Disability specialist for the Disability Support Services. She said that some use different colors of highlighters for different parts of their texts.

She said that if students have a learning disability, they can seek assistance from the Disability Support Services.

"If someone has a documented disability, we can help them," Blair said. "We provide academic accommodations for them, such as extra time on tests, copies of lecture notes and so on."

Different people will find different techniques for learning information to be more useful, Frieman said. He said it doesn't matter what technique you use, as long as you learn the information.

"Once you've learned something, and it is in your long-term memory, like a language, it's going to stay there," Frieman said. "If you don't use it, you may forget it, but it's still in there. You just might have problems bringing it out."

Frieman said this is a reason why some students have difficulty taking tests.

"That's why students do better on final exams, because it is easier to re-learn once you already have it and then you can make connections. A good instructor will show connections that students need to make in their class."

Marilyn Monroe jewelry stolen from London's County Hall Gallery

Two pieces of jewelry that once belonged to Marilyn Monroe have been stolen from an exhibition, police said Tuesday.

A diamond-encrusted gold ring with an "M" motif and a gold bangle, together worth $64,000, were stolen from central London's County Hall Gallery, which is housing the exhibition about the actress, "Marilyn Monroe: Life of a Legend."

Scotland Yard said the items were stolen Monday afternoon. One man was arrested in the thefts and was being held by police.

ESPN and Wimbledon agree on a 4-year deal to televise tournaments

ESPN reached a four-year agreement to televise Wimbledon from 2003-06.

ESPN and ESPN2 will broadcast nearly 120 hours of programming from the All England Club starting June 23, the network said Monday. Coverage will feature one men's and one women's semifinal. NBC will show the finals, besides other coverage.

PERSONALITY PROFILE

John O'Hara
Student Body President

1. What would you like to be having for dinner?

"Dillon's Chinese takeout food is an all-time favorite. I enjoy their lo mein noodles, lemon chicken and their sesame chicken."

2. What is in your CD player right now, or who is your favorite musical artist?

"I do not have a favorite artist and typically listen to the radio. I do, however, enjoy James Brown, and I currently enjoy listening to Jack Johnson."

3. What kind of car do you drive?

"I drive a 2000 Honda Accord. I really wanted a fuel-efficient four-door sedan with a high standard of safety and one that maintains its resale value. The Honda Accord met these requirements."

4. What was the last movie you saw?

"The last movie I saw was 'The Ring.' I had heard from several friends that it was an intriguing mystery full of unpredictable twists. It was an entertaining suspenseful thriller — not my personal favorite, but a good movie nonetheless."

5. What is your must-see TV show?

"I do not really have a must-see TV show. If I have time, I enjoy watching 'CSI' or 'Seinfeld.'"

6. What is your favorite place to eat?

"Coco Bolo's would be my top choice for a place to eat out in Manhattan. I enjoy the good food and fun atmosphere."

7. Who is your idol and why?

"I look up to my parents and my big brother. My parents have taught me the importance of respect, integrity and service to others. My big brother has always been there to support me and has successfully battled and overcome a brain tumor. He never showed a sign of weakness or doubt and demonstrated courage that is difficult to put into words."

8. What is your favorite alcoholic drink?

"I enjoy a good gin and tonic or a Crown and Coke. A big Boulevard Wheat beer is my beer of choice."

9. What is the craziest thing you have done in college?

"My freshman year I streaked through a couple of sororities in my boxers."

10. Have you ever cheated on a test?

"Definitely not in college, but probably in high school."

Lawrence-based band Podstar performs in the basement of the home of Manhattan-based band Three Rivers Kennedy. Podstar got its start in Manhattan and has stayed together longer than any other band from the city.

Details make being in a band tougher than it looks at clubs

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

It was easy to be fooled by the tight image Podstar projected in the limelight of a darkened basement Thursday night.

Playing in the basement where members of local rock band Three Rivers Kennedy live, Podstar has been together eight years. But it isn't as easy as it looks at the shows. Guitarist and vocalist Jojo Longbottom knows.

"We do get sick of each other, but we get over it," he said before the band's CD release last spring.

So what goes into making it happen? That's the part of local music not many people think about when some guy idly chats about maybe starting a band with a couple of friends and a drummer he knows.

"First and foremost, any band that wants to do things outside of Manhattan needs to realize it's about 95 percent work and 5 percent fun," Dave Spiker, drummer for the Pemberton, said.

"There's a lot of hard work behind the scenes, and the more successful a band is, the more willing someone, if not all of the members, are willing to do that work."

Making the Band

The first step for any band is just to find the musicians.

Those unacquainted with the regulars in the music scene often resort to putting up flyers, advertising for specific musicians they are missing from a line-up. Paul White, drummer for Chicago 7, said flyers can be good and bad, but bands have to be able to tell someone that he or she isn't right for the band.

"Sometimes it works out well, and you'll hook up with the right people," said White, senior in political science and radio and television broadcasting. "And sometimes they just do a good job of inviting strange people into the group who you might not be interested in."

Justin Peterson, drummer for Three Rivers Kennedy, said he has become skeptical of flyers since using them to help get Elemental started back in 2000. Instead, he said he would recommend getting to know people in the local music scene and find people who get along well to form a band.

"You've got to have the same musical interests, and the same type of personalities," Peterson, senior in fine arts, said. "We've made a point of trying to do this so we'll still be going in the future, so we know how we get along with each other when we're in a van together for a week. With the old band, we just weren't on the same page musically, so we had to end that."

Peterson now lives with bandmates Ben Gray and Brandon Eck, and he said that when they reformed as Three Rivers Kennedy, finding a style was easy.

As a frontman, Eck has taken on the song-writing responsibilities, and the band derived its style from his work.

But sometimes finding a style isn't so easy. While it sounds enticing at first, many music veterans warn against trying to fuse too many styles.

"In our old band, we had the idea that we would just bring it all to the table to be creative and different," Peterson said. "Now we have the same core of stuff we work on. Maybe that cuts down on the creativity, not that I would stay away from a new twist, but you've got to have a big common ground."

One early decision that Spiker said should be made is whether the band will do covers. For him, it's not something in which he's ever been interested.

"You should be open to doing covers, but if you want to go out and do shows, and get a following, then you need to form an identity. You don't want to be known as the local cover band, but you can be open to playing a cool cover here and there."

Getting Gigs

So, you three have finally found a bass player who will wear the stage makeup and dress you picked out ahead of time. Now, how do you get in front of an audience?

Spiker said the two most important things in finding gigs as a new band are to network, and stay open to anything.

"Go to shows," he said. "Ask bands if you can play with them sometime or ask them to introduce you to the owner or person who books the shows. If you have a CD demo so they can hear what you're like, that helps."

Spiker has become pretty adept at finding gigs in Manhattan. He started Ruskabank with Donnyves Laroque in 1996 as a sophomore in biology, and has been active in the local scene ever since. Now he focuses most of his attention on the Pembertons and sometimes performs in his solo project, Jonathan.

He recommended finding other bands to play with often to build up a joint following.

"There's a connection right now with Gang of Hours, Purify and Ten 'til Blue, and they all play together a lot and get along together, and that works well for them," he said.

It also helps to have something to pass around to possible venues. That's where a media pack can come in handy.

The formula usually is to include a biography, a demo and sometimes a picture of the band or relevant articles. The biography describes the band's style and some of its or its members' past accomplishments. Think of this as a résumé. The pictures and articles often are optional, but the key is the demo.

For this, the consensus is to keep costs down. It isn't something meant to be sold, but it needs to sound good enough to get the attention of the people who will be booking you for a show.

"Your first demo should be whatever you can afford," Spiker said. "Don't be impatient. Don't just rush in to put it out. It's nothing too extravagant, and almost anywhere here in Kansas will be pretty reasonable pricewise for what you're dealing with."

Recording

Occasionally a local band will spend its own money on a high-dollar studio release like Pins and Needles.

recent debut album. But most of the time, bands save money from gigs until they have enough to get an album nearly finished.

The Pembertons have a full-length album in production after recording the material in early January. Spiker said they used gig money and money they made from their E.P. "Starting the Fire" to finance their studio time and production costs.

He said the same method was used for producing Ruskabank's albums. Now the band is saving gig money to pay for the mastering process of the album, and it expects to have a final product possibly by next fall.

"We're just gotta be patient," he said. "We're real proud of it, though. I think it's going to be a very good album."

Choosing a place to record is a vital part of the process. Though many Kansas bands have come to see Ed Rose as the pinnacle of local production, others venture out of state. The Pembertons traveled to Chicago to work with one-time Manhattanite Andy Bosnak at Engine Studios.

Three Rivers Kennedy worked with Impossibles frontman Rory Phillips in Austin, Texas, to record its soon-to-be-released E.P., Peterson said. With only seven days to work, the band decided to keep the CD short when the clock began to run.

"We just decided at that point we needed a better CD," he said. "We could have gone somewhere and done full-length, but we decided to cut the number of songs and keep it high-quality."

After a band has survived ego clashes, financial decisions and the dilemma of whether or not to include a cleverly hidden track on its first release, what's the most difficult thing? For Spiker, it's just living with the people in the band.

"It's about dealing with other people and interpersonal relationships," he said. "You've got to have an idea and a focused goal, but if you're willing to do what it takes to be in a band, then you'll have fun either way."

Fans of Lawrence-based band Podstar crowded into the basement of the home of Manhattan-based band Three Rivers Kennedy. Three Rivers Kennedy hosted the event that included two bands for only $3.

America At War

Bush urges U.N. to lift sanctions

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The top commander of U.S. forces in Iraq briefed President Bush on the war from inside one of Saddam Hussein's ornate palaces on Wednesday, underscoring the death of the old regime. At home, the administration reduced the terrorist threat a notch, from orange to yellow.

Bush urged the United Nations to lift economic sanctions against Iraq, saying the country had been liberated by U.S.-led forces.

"Terrorists and tyrants have now been put on notice," he added.

Four weeks after the war began, American troops in Baghdad raided the home of the mastermind of Iraq's biological weapons laboratory and discovered a recently abandoned terrorist training camp operated by Palestinians and the Iraqi government.

Amy forces exchanged fire with a small number of die-hard paramilitary fighters north of Baghdad, then took out two surface-to-air missile systems and three anti-aircraft guns left over from Saddam's military.

Iraqis in Mosul said three people were killed and at least 11 wounded when shooting erupted for the second day. Iraqis blamed the Americans, but the circumstances were cloudy.

SARS suspected in northeast

Woman exhibiting symptoms now healthy

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A second suspected case of SARS was reported in Kansas on Tuesday.

This case was identified in a northeast Kansas woman who recently traveled to southeast Asia and demonstrated symptoms of the disease.

Sharon Watson, public information director for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said the bloodwork has been sent to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta for testing.

She said the woman was not hospitalized and apparently now has recovered.

The possibility that she would have given the disease to someone else is limited only to people with whom she had close contact. Watson said the family members and health-care workers the patient was in contact with have been told to watch for symptoms during the next 10 days and report any symptoms to their physicians.

SARS — severe acute respiratory syndrome — is a respiratory disease that includes symptoms of high fever, respiratory problems and body aches. Traveling to affected areas also is a key component of the disease, but not everyone is at risk.

"Those people who are most at risk are those who have traveled to countries with SARS or their immediate family members who have traveled to countries with SARS, or they have been exposed to healthcare workers who have had close contact with suspect SARS patients," Watson said.

The first case of suspected

SARS was reported March 20 involving a south central Kansas man. He was hospitalized but has since recovered.

Watson said the CDC recently requested additional tests from the first suspected case. These additional tests were taken after he got well to see if he developed any antibodies against SARS. If antibodies are present, it will indicate that he did have SARS, she said.

She said that for both cases there hasn't been information yet as to a confirmation of SARS.

The latest information regarding research of the virus has determined that the disease is a type of a coronavirus, which is the same kind of virus that causes the common cold.

"This is a significant find that will help determine how to treat it and to develop a vaccine to fight it," she said.

10 animal blood donors live at hospital for emergencies

By Kelli Pitman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People are not the only ones at K-State who are giving their blood to help save lives.

Six greyhound dogs and four cats that live at K-State's Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital are blood donors for other dogs and cats that need their help.

The small animal clinic at the hospital sees many emergencies in which dogs or cats need blood transfusions, and there are no animal blood banks available like there are for humans.

Chad Johannes, assistant professor at the hospital, said having its own donors helps the hospital ensure the animals are healthy and have no parasites or other infections that could contaminate their blood.

A dog's blood has seven main antigens, so the hospital ensures that all of its dogs are universal donors. Additionally, cats have either type A or type B blood. Three of the cats at K-State are type A, and one is type B.

"Having the blood here helps us treat very sick animals and save many of them from dying," Johannes said.

The dogs that are chosen to be donors often are from Kansas and typically are greyhounds that cannot race any longer. Cat donors often have participated in previous research projects at K-State.

The donors are at K-State for a year and then are adopted into a family. Many times they are adopted by senior veterinary medicine students who have worked with them and gotten to know them during the year. Other times, they are adopted by doctors or previous adopters.

"We hardly ever have a problem finding people that want to adopt the animals, and we feel very fortunate when doctors take them home," Karyl Brandon, animal science technician, said.

Brandon has been working with donors at K-State for 15 years and is known as the mom of the group.

USD 383 addresses crossing program

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Earlier this month the Riley County Police Department announced that they were handing over the responsibilities of the school crossing guard program to the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School District beginning Jan. 1.

Two weeks have passed since the announcement, and school officials addressed their concerns on the program's future at Wednesday night's School Board meeting.

John Maberry, USD 383 representative, presented a number of crossing guard alternatives to Board members, including the use of existing school personnel — such as maintenance or paraprofessionals — to relieve the problem.

Maberry said additional alternatives would include utilizing a bus system, maintain crossing guards at only those locations deemed unsafe and eliminating the services altogether.

The Board's concerns were not only focused on alternatives, however; they were aimed toward finding a governmental body that would be responsible and oversee the program.

Undergraduates work as chemistry aides in labs

Sometimes students have jobs apart from the school atmosphere. But sometimes students just can't get enough of school and have jobs that are a part of school.

Cameron Fahrenholz is such a student — she's a teacher's aide.

Fahrenholz, senior in biochemistry, teaches one section of the Chemistry I lab this semester.

"I pretty much have three responsibilities," she said. "I teach a three-hour chemistry lab once a week, I grade the labs and I proctor the lecture and lab exams. There's usually about seven tests each semester."

Fahrenholz said one downfall of her job is the time it takes to grade lab assignments.

SPOTLIGHT ON | Phi Kappa Phi fellow

Senior named fellow, receives scholarship

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jeremy Stohs isn't worrying about how he'll spend $8,000.

"The money will definitely be spent," Stohs, senior in political science, said, referring to the scholarship he received from the Phi Kappa Phi Fellowship program for being named one of its fellows.

Laurie Bagby, associate professor of political science, was one faculty member who elected Stohs for the scholarship.

"Jeremy is an outstanding student, which is why I thought he would be eligible for the Phi Kappa Phi Scholarship," she said. "He is wonderful to work with — always there, always with a great idea about how to deal with a problem or get the word out about the political science program."

Even though Stohs, a member of Beta Sigma Psi, received a full tuition scholarship from George Washington University, where he plans to attend a two-year graduate program, he said the money is greatly appreciated.

"It will be used to pay for a roof over my head," he said.

He said he plans to take night classes so he can work through school.

"I am going to try to work for a Kansas representative on Capitol Hill or for the Governmental Affairs office in Washington, D.C.," he said.

Stohs will graduate summa cum laude from K-State in May with a degree in public policy and a minor in leadership studies.

"It's a combination of public administration, statistics and economics with a concentration in applied social science studies, which is governmental relations and issues management," Stohs said.

With all of this, Stohs said he wants to be involved in policy and advocacy.

"I am being pretty flexible right now," he said. "I want to get out and see what opportunities are available before I specialize my career."

Stohs is working on his senior thesis with Joseph Aistrup, head of K-State's Department of Political Science.

"Jeremy is working on a project with contract lobbysts in the state legislature," Aistrup said. "He has personally interviewed some lobbyists, as well as conducted surveys."

Stohs said lobbying practices are the reason he chose to continue his education.

"You begin to realize that government policy affects the lives of people profoundly and that policymaking is a task with serious consequences," he said.

Stohs said his interest in politics has given him the opportunity for some good internships.

"I interned for Kansas speaker of the House Kent Glasscock in 2001 and the Heritage Foundation in Washington D.C., which is a leading conservative public policy think tank," he said.

Stohs said he has had some political experience at the university level in student government.

"In the Student Governing Association, we try to get the students' voices to both the Manhattan City Council and the Kansas Legislature," he said. "I've dealt with everything from tuition increases to roundabouts."

Stohs said political science takes up a lot of his time, but it's not the only thing he does.

"I love hunting, fishing and camping," he said. "I also like to go to the bars — I've taken a few tours of Aggieville."

BEST BETS | FOR THIS WEEKEND

1 | BORN LEADERS

Roe v. Wade attorney Sarah Weddington will lecture at 7 tonight in the Union Ballroom. The Union Program Council presents her lecture "Some Women Are Born Leaders."

2 | MOST WANTED

"Malibu's Most Wanted" opens Friday at Seth Childs Cinema. Starring Jamie Kennedy, Anthony Anderson and Taye Diggs, it is a story of a wannabe rap star who thinks he's from the "hood."

3 | CRAZY '80S

Starting at 9 p.m. Friday in the Union Courtyard, students can participate in '80s costume, dance and big hair contests. After Hours also features Atari games and a free breakfast at 11 p.m. The evening ends with a free showing of "The Breakfast Club" at midnight in Forum Hall.

4 | GARAGE SALES

Gas up the car and drive around town this weekend in search of used goods. Who knows what treasures you can find?

5 | EASTER SUNDAY

The Easter Bunny might be visiting your residence this Sunday to bring eggs and candy. You can get up early and catch a sunrise service or sleep in and find a 10:30 a.m. service as local churches offer addition services for this holiday.

Easter Sunday services at local churches are available from sunrise to noon.

The new comedy starring Jamie Kennedy and Anthony Anderson opens Friday. "Malibu's Most Wanted" is rated PG-13 for sexual humor, language and violence.

BLOOD | Animals donate, meet demand

She makes sure that the animals get fed, exercised and loved well each day.

She said veterinary students each have an animal that they care for. They check them over and give them a quick physical to make sure they are healthy about once a week.

The dogs give blood about once a month, and the cats donate once every six to eight weeks. There also is a dog that is reserved in case a full blood transfusion is needed.

"There is a very high demand for blood, and it is very rare that any blood ever goes to waste,"

Johannes said.

When donating blood, the animals are lightly sedated, and the process takes 20 to 30 minutes. It is a similar process to that of humans.

Afterward, the animals receive fluid and are given time to recover. Brandon and other students keep an eye on the donors and make sure they recover adequately.

"This program is really great because it really benefits the patients, it is good for the students to learn about and be involved with transfusions, and it is good for the donors because they have a very good life and are very well cared for," Johannes said.

Panelists discuss opposing views of war, religion

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just more than 30 people took advantage of the opportunity to answer a question that has been lingering in the minds of the majority of the world.

"Is War the Answer?" - a panel discussion sponsored by the International Coordination Council as a part of International Week - took place Wednesday night in the K-State Student Union's Big 12 Room.

Four panelists - two opposing the war and two supporting the war - were given the floor to speak their minds on their beliefs.

The panelists in support of the war were Vilem Vatri, junior in civil engineering, from the Czech Republic, and Johnny Coomansingh, doctoral candidate in geography, from Trinidad and Tobago.

Those against the war were Talat Rahman, professor of physics, from Pakistan, and John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy and board member of the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice.

Leila Zakhirova, president of ICC and panel coordinator, said that there were only a few rules.

"There is no right or wrong answer," she said.

Vatri gave a brief history of Iraqi history as a basis for the necessity of war.

Coomansingh said the war is necessary because perceived threats must be handled.

Rahman said she is not opposed to war, but this war is not necessary.

Exdell said though some countries could be considered rogue states, the U.S. is picking on countries that do not do its bidding.

Though the panelists did not agree, Zakhirova said that was not what she hoped to accomplish.

"I thought it would be a chance for students and faculty on campus to express their opinions," she said.

said. "Some weeks you spend less time grading, and some weeks you spend more time."

Fahrenheit said there are 18 students in her lab class, and most are freshmen.

"Each student has a professor for lecture, and then an undergraduate or graduate student usually teaches the lab," she said.

Undergraduate students can teach Chemistry I, Chemistry II or General Chemistry, she said. The more advanced classes usually are taught by graduate students.

"I like being one of the first teachers they encounter on campus. I want to let them realize that chemistry isn't as hard as everyone thinks it is.

"It'd be easy to get lost in a big lecture hall. There's more personalized teaching in a lab setting," she said.

Fahrenheit said she also likes helping students understand the material.

"I really like it when I can see on a student's face when they make the connection between material learned in lab and lecture," she said.

Earline Dikeman, director of undergraduate chemistry labs, said Fahrenheit is helpful to her students.

"Cameron is one who does a real good job," she said. "Sometimes the TAs will have help sessions for the students or hand out study guides. I know Cameron sometimes offers help sessions."

Dikeman said Fahrenheit is an excellent lab teacher and is good at explaining material so students comprehend it.

"She knows the material, and if she isn't sure about something, she always comes and asks me," she said. "She's very organized and very confident."

Dikeman said she often will ask the opinions of professors of future teacher's aides.

Fahrenheit said she was referred to the job by some of her friends who had been teacher's aides.

"I'm a member of Alpha Chi Sigma, a chemistry fraternity, and a lot of my friends have done this job previously," she said. "They recommended it to me."

"I'm really glad I found out about it because I really enjoy it," she said.

Fahrenheit said that after graduation she would like to teach at the college level.

"Next year I hope to work in a research lab so I'll have a year of lab experience. Then I'd like to go to graduate school," she said. "After that, my hope would be to do neuroscience research and work part-time as an associate professor."

TO THE POINT

Crossing guard issue deserves attention of city, police, district

The Riley County Police Department handed its responsibilities of the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 crossing guard program to the school district because of staffing and financial problems.

However, during this process, the program's structure and organization has taken a hit.

Instead of handing over the crossing guard responsibilities, the police department and the school district – along with governmental bodies throughout the city – must work together to implement a program that focuses not only on children's safety, but seeks to improve the program in the future.

Each party has stressed the significance of continuing the crossing guard program in future years.

Therefore, it is imperative that governmental bodies throughout the city of Manhattan combine forces to go above and beyond the expectations of the crossing guard program.

A partnership not only enhances the purpose of the program, but it also allows the community to get involved. This should help benefit those who really need it: the pupils.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

MEDIA BATTLEFIELDS

Modern warfare carried out through media's advertising, propaganda

In the age of modern warfare, the proverbial fist fight and bout has gone the way of men's fishnet hosiery and painting your house pastel – very unchic.

People say wars aren't fought on the battlefield anymore. Well, of course they are. Where else would they be fought? Through letters of belligerence or ill-intent carried to your door as part of your warring correspondence made possible by Fred, your not-so-friendly postman? You'd be surprised.

The war picks the battlefield, not vice versa. But today's skirmishes are seldom with poison-tipped arrows, swords, catapults or Trojan horses. You know, all those really conventional and modern marvels of inflicting death and destruction.

Conflicts are waged, rather, with television, newspapers and pamphlets. The casting of the written evil eye and letting people know it's trained on them is the new art of war. Things have truly developed into "a war of minds and words."

In 1991, the world was able to get the vast majority of Iraqi troops to walk freely off the battlefield because of one word – propaganda.

As such, the battlefield becomes any and all places reached by foot, boat, plane, train or your closest pleasantly groomed taxi cab driver, and not just in the sense of America versus Iraq or some other foreign entity.

Much of the time, America is its own enemy, training its sights on the likes of you, your neighbor, the family across the street and everyone else in the same congressional district.

Nowadays, the word "propaganda" carries a negative connotation. But few realize that descriptively the word stands for people professing what they believe and spreading the word of the gospel and Christianity. So how could such a mechanism of free speech, religion and expression be negative?

It is the same reason why America isn't communist, your community is not utopian and why children should not accept rides home from smiley strangers with popsicles. On paper alone, all these work and sound terrific, but the problem remains that things aren't perfect because people and their intentions are not perfect or pure. Too many take advantage, spurning this ideological model for the sake of greed, self-betterment and ambition.

For proof, we only have to look to television or the newspaper to uncover what seems like a global conspiracy by everyone to dupe everyone else. Being both the cautious consumer and the profit-driven salesman, we find ourselves too often afflicted with the need to get our message out and the self-want to be improved. This is precisely why we allow ourselves to take advantage and to be taken advantage of at the same time.

The anti-drug commercials, how could such a push for abstaining from harmful drugs be misanthropic?

They are intentionally misleading. Smoking marijuana isn't healthy, but it definitely doesn't impair your judgment in the way alcohol does and contribute to unwanted pregnancy because of your apparent lack of control.

Infomercials are the same way. What? You already have knives? Well, I bet you don't have one that can single-handedly dice an onion into a two-inch pile of powder while only using your index finger and the patented easy grip rubberized handle. And it's so easy! Why don't we restore propaganda to what it was and call this what it really is – advertising.

Inefficiencies in the state government. Hmm. How about paying 100 KDOT workers to sit in our Union all day and eat doughnuts? That's real efficient.

Legalization of medicinal marijuana creates pain-free illusions, causes dependency

Editor,

In response to Wednesday's article, "Legal Control."

I'm no medical expert, but my dad has survived a heart attack and my mom has survived chemotherapy for breast cancer.

There are several reasons marijuana is not administered as a drug, and not a single one of them is hypocrisy.

A doctor's primary goal is not to eliminate pain. If that were the case, everyone would get a load of novocaine every visit. Doctors administer drugs to help their patients get better.

For example, a drug like aspirin might be given to a patient with arthritis. It helps them with the pain so they can continue their regular routine.

Other drugs, like marijuana and novocaine, have more of a "knockout" effect. These medicines offer no cures. They simply supply the patient with an illusion of happiness. It offers the patient an escape from the world of reality.

The history of medicine is long, and we have learned that false hope like that only compounds the patient's problems.

My dad takes several pills a day, but he's always been there for me. The time I've spent with him is priceless.

I was able to watch my sister's softball game with him last week. He has survived and learned to live again. He is an active family member, always up to see the latest football game with the family. If doctors legally issued alcohol or marijuana-like drugs, things would be very different.

Some of my friends have had alcoholic parents, and using marijuana would have certain similarities. Alcohol and marijuana are both used as escapes from reality. If my dad turned to either of those drugs, he would have faded in his family roles. How would he be able to show his love for his children while under the influence? When my youngest sister's cat was hit by a car, would he have been able to offer his support? Or just take another puff or drink?

Those kind of drugs lead to a spiral of dependence. It would remove his pain, but also remove him.

How would he be able to play catch or drive? Would he be able to handle his bills, insurance, avoid making bad financial decisions?

I admit, I'm no expert in the field of medicine. But I feel we should hear much more expert opinions and facts before deciding whether to legalize medicinal marijuana. I remember seeing my dad drugged while he was in the hospital, and it was like he wasn't even there.

I can't stand the thought that all of the things that make him Dad, his smile and opinions, would be impaired by a drug simply for pain.

I haven't met the people who are in so much pain they would want marijuana for their pain, but I have the feeling they would be losing more than they gained by taking it.

To sum my opinion up, I believe that marijuana is not administered by doctors because it can cause the withdrawal of the patient from their close relationships, impairs the ability to live a normal life, and can create a dependency.

Kansas legislators work to pass bill hindering higher education's ability to recruit faculty at national level

Editor,

The American higher education system is shot through with competition.

No one can deny it. Just as basketball programs recruit the best players available in order to compete with other universities, academic departments try to hire the most promising faculty members.

Why, then, is this amateurish legislature trying to pass a bill that effectively would hinder the ability of Kansas universities to compete at a national level? Who, after all, would want to join the faculty of a university whose state legislature openly demonstrates its willingness to use budget powers to subvert academic rigor?

Susan Wagle should be ashamed of herself. As a business owner, she ought at least to recognize the importance of competition. What's more, she and the other legislators who voted for the bill obviously do not have enough trust in the university students of Kansas to choose for themselves the courses in which they enroll and the materials they view.

I am perplexed how it is possible simultaneously to step on the toes of Kansas higher education while expecting it to stride ahead in pursuit of academic excellence.

Note to self: after graduation, move away.

Did He Die Just For The Hell Of It?

Jesus of Nazareth died a horrific death—beaten, whipped with bone or metal pieces fixed in a nine-lash whip, mocked with a crown of two-inch thorns pressed into his head, wrists and feet nailed to a cross where he hung until he died of slow suffocation. What was it all for? For nothing?

On the contrary, Jesus had many reasons for going through this and all of those reasons center around you:

1) This was Jesus, who had healed people from lifelong diseases, from physical disabilities like blindness, paralysis, even demon-possession. He stopped a violent storm at sea, miraculously fed crowds of over 5,000. So when they nailed him to a cross, it was not those nails keeping him there—it was his love for us.

2) He had clearly identified himself as God. That's why the religious authorities were having him tortured and killed. But on five different occasions before his arrest, Jesus declared that he would be crucified and three days later come back to life. He wanted people to publicly see him killed and buried, so that when he rose from the dead, they would know that everything he said about his identity was true. Three days later, his burial tomb was empty. People spoke with him and saw him physically alive (more than 500 people)—he wanted us to know he really was God in the flesh, just as he said.

3) His death on the cross was to allow us to have a relationship with him, which he obviously desires. There is only one thing that keeps us from having a close relationship with God—"your iniquity [sin] has made a separation between you and your God." And there is a penalty, a price to be paid, for our sin. Going to church? No. Being a good person? No. The penalty for our sin is death. Death?! So that we would not have to die for our sin, Jesus died in our place. As the prophet Isaiah stated nearly 600 years before Jesus was born, "All of us like sheep have gone astray, each of us has turned to his own ways; but the Lord has caused the iniquity [sin] of us all to fall on him." He paid (fully) for our sin and now offers us complete forgiveness.

4) We don't expect God to offer us forgiveness and eternal life, but he does. But such a gift only belongs to those who take it. Instead of trying to perform for God, look what he has done for you. How many of us are trying to get close to God, not realizing that he already desires to come into our lives? Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the door, I will come into him."

If you're like many people, you sense God's desire to know you and have a personal relationship with you. But he won't force you into a relationship with him, which you've probably already discovered. It's simply a matter of wanting him to come into your life, and then you making the decision to invite him in. If you need help knowing how to ask him, here you go:

"Jesus, thank you for paying for my sins. I open the door of my life right now, and ask you to come in. Do with my life what you would like. Thank you for your forgiveness and for coming into my life right now." If you asked him into your life just now, your sins are forgiven, he really came into your life and he will never leave you nor forsake you.

You can learn more about knowing God by reading the section called "John" in the Bible. You can also learn more about Jesus' life, death and facts supporting his resurrection in the feature article BEYOND BLIND FAITH at www.EveryStudent.com.

White Sox fans live up to tough reputation

Spectator charges field, attacks Chicago umpire

Comedian Fred Allen once said, "Things are so tough in Chicago that at Easter time, for bunnies, the little kids use porcupines." While Allen said this clear back in 1956, his quote couldn't be more relevant today.

Here we are in the week before Easter nearly 50 years later, and Chicago is once again living up to its stereotype of being a rough-and-tumble town.

During the Kansas City Royals game against the Chicago White Sox Tuesday night, first base umpire Laz Diaz was attacked. Attacked not by a swarm of killer bees or by a pit bull but by something much more crazed and vicious: a White Sox fan.

The last time the Royals were in Chicago was Sept. 19, 2002. Two fans attacked Kansas City coach Tom Gamboa during that game, and another fan was involved in an attack on security. Gamboa, who was serving as the Royals' first base coach then, was completely stunned by the unprovoked attack.

The perpetrator was a father-and-son duo that looked like they had either just left a taping of the Jerry Springer Show or had just found out that Mötley Crüe had broken up.

After the two individuals ran on the field and assaulted Gamboa, it took a few moments for stunned Royals players to react and rush to Gamboa's defense.

On Tuesday, the Royals were prepared and reacted justly and swiftly.

This time, three fans already had been arrested for running onto the field before the fourth trespasser decided to attack Diaz.

The attack happened during the bottom of the eighth, right after Royals right fielder Brandon Berger caught a fly ball. Berger then came flying in to help out Diaz. The fight was on. By the time the melee ended, the attacker had gotten a friendly reminder from the Royals about what happens when you break the law and try to harm an umpire or player.

Royals' General Manager Allard Baird has since stated the Royals won't play in Chicago again until the White Sox step up security. Royals manager Tony Pena said Wednesday, "I don't like to send my guys out because I don't know whether they're going to be safe or not."

Both of these games have been scary reminders of the type of dangers athletes shouldn't have to deal with. It's sad that players and umpires have to worry about their safety while playing America's pastime.

On-field problems with fans have taken place in Chicago's U.S. Cellular Field, which is set to be host to the 2003 MLB All-Star Game. This ballpark and its forerunner — Old Comiskey Park — have always been notorious for being on the rough side of Chicago, so I guess you would only expect this type of activity from Chicagoans.

Another quote from Herman Fetzner comes to mind as a solution to this problem, "There's only one thing for Chicago to do, and that's to move to a better neighborhood."

Well, since they can't pack up and move, we can just hope for a safe conclusion to this series against the White Sox and hope none of the kids in Chicago get poked by the Easter Porcupine in Chicago during the holiday weekend.

After seven years in Lawrence coaching the University of Kansas track and field team, Coach Cliff Rovelto has made a name for himself in his 11th season with the Wildcats. This weekend, Rovelto returns to Lawrence to compete against his old school in the Kansas Relays.

Track coach returns to roots

K-State to compete in Kansas Relays in Lawrence this weekend

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Construction at R.V. Christian Track has left K-State's track team without an outdoor home.

So this weekend's Kansas Relays represent the closest the Wildcats will come to a familiarity advantage early this season.

For Coach Cliff Rovelto, though, Lawrence means more than just a short drive and an extra night in his own bed.

"I went to school there, graduated from there and coached there for seven years," Rovelto said.

But don't look for the 11-year coaching veteran to bolt back to the crimson and blue anytime soon.

For the first time in his life he's put down roots, and they're dyed purple.

All his life Rovelto has jumped from place to place. He was born in Ancon, Panama, and grew up a self-described "army brat," never spending more than three semesters at the same high school.

When he was 18, he graduated from Leavenworth High School. Cash-strapped, Rovelto could only afford the closest in-state university.

"After graduation I couldn't afford to go out of state," he said. "I went to the closest, most affordable school. That was KU."

Rovelto received a degree and got a job coaching at McLouth (Kan.) High School. Three years later, he returned to Lawrence and took a position on the University of Kansas' track and field staff.

He got his first taste of coaching college track and field at Kansas and spent seven years guiding the Jayhawks before becoming an assistant at K-State.

Rovelto's arrival in Manhattan wasn't pretty, though. He stepped in to coach a dilapidated program on probation that lacked the drive, integrity and facilities necessary for success.

"When I was an assistant here, we had competitive teams as far as where it placed in the conference," he said, "but we didn't have the same character we do now."

Four years as an assistant earned Rovelto the head coaching job, and shortly after, the Cat coach was busy turning K-State into a powerhouse.

When he first arrived, school wasn't as important. That quickly changed. He altered his team's priorities from running to school work.

He started recruiting students who felt the same, and that strategy became the basis for success.

"Every member of the team is serious about getting a degree," he said. "Some of those kids from back then wouldn't be brought into the program now. That makes a significant difference."

Rovelto has guided 31 All-Americans and remains the only Wildcat coach ever to win a Big 12 Championship.

In fact, with the 2001 and 2002 women's track team, he's done it twice.

Rovelto also has seen an overhauling of K-State's track facilities. When Ahearn Field House was closed to basketball, an indoor track was put in. Construction on a new, state-of-the-art outdoor track will be completed later this spring.

His only motivation was to provide for K-State.

"My goal was to offer K-State a chance for continued or even greater success after I leave," he said.

But he won't have to worry about a successor anytime soon if he has anything to say about it. In an age when coaches jump ship at a moment's notice, Rovelto has planted his roots deep in Wildcat soil.

"As long as they want me here, I can see myself staying," he said.

"I feel comfortable here, and I like that. I think there are a lot of good things about this university. It's not just another school."

Equestrian teams to ride in varsity championship

By David Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's equestrian team, victorious at Zone 9 Championships last weekend, will put its No. 1 ranking on the line Friday at the National Varsity Equestrian Championships in College Station, Texas.

The English riders will hit the show ring at 8 a.m. with the Western teams competing at 1 p.m. at the N.W. Freeman Arena.

"As an emerging sport, it's our form of a championship," assistant coach Meghan Cunningham said. "Only varsity schools will be competing there."

Twelve schools will be on hand, representing the toughest field the Wildcats have faced this season.

In addition, each school will bring only its top riders, a departure from typical equestrian shows. Classes won't be broken down by skill, meaning only the best will be in action.

"All the top riders will be there, so it will be a very interesting and fun experience for us," senior Amanda Gigot said. "We want to go in there and show them we are the No. 1 school."

Defending IHSA Western champions Texas A&M will join Oklahoma State and Auburn as the Wildcats' stiffest competition. All three schools finished in the top

NBA | Jordan finishes career from foul line
Michael Jordan's final shot was a free throw, and, like his final appearance in an NBA uniform, it was good.

Jordan played the last game of his illustrious career Wednesday night, receiving a lengthy standing ovation from nearly everyone in the arena.

Jordan soaked it all up with a wide smile and a wave to the crowd after exiting the game for good with 1:44 remaining in the fourth quarter of a 107-87 loss to the Philadelphia 76ers.

Jordan finished with 15 points, four rebounds and four assists in 28 minutes — drawing several ovations from the last sellout crowd that will ever watch him play.

MLB | Security reviewed nationwide

Major league baseball will review security at ballparks nationwide to try to prevent fan violence following the attack on an umpire at a White Sox game.

Top baseball officials were in Chicago on Wednesday to investigate the assault on first base umpire Laz Diaz, which raised concern and questions throughout the majors.

It came just three months before the All-Star game at U.S. Cellular Field and about seven months after a similar attack on a first base coach at the stadium.

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig said he was extremely troubled by the assault Tuesday night during the game between the White Sox and Kansas City Royals.

College baseball | Stephenson's surgery

Wichita State baseball Coach Gene Stephenson will be out for about 10 days after undergoing prostate surgery.

Surgeons removed a benign tumor Monday, the university said.

Stephenson, 57, is in his 26th season at Wichita State, where he coached the Shockers to the College World Series title in 1989.

This is his first absence from the team, the school said. In his absence, assistant Jim Thomas will serve as interim head coach.

NFL | Seau traded to Dolphins for pick

Linebacker Junior Seau joined the Miami Dolphins on Wednesday after passing a physical, completing a long-anticipated trade with the San Diego Chargers.

The Dolphins sent a conditional 2004 draft choice to San Diego in return for Seau, a 12-time Pro Bowl selection.

Dolphins coach Dave Wannstedt lauded Seau's passion, talent and professionalism as he introduced the new linebacker at a news conference Wednesday.

WNBA | Sides continue labor talks

With a Friday deadline looming to get a deal done or risk having the season canceled, contract talks between the WNBA and its union are set to resume Thursday.

The two sides met for 90 minutes Monday after the league postponed its Wednesday player draft, and a WNBA spokesperson said Tuesday more talks are planned.

College basketball | KU talking to Self

The University of Kansas got permission Wednesday to speak with Illinois basketball Coach Bill Self about its coaching vacancy, an Illinois spokesman said.

Self is the top candidate to succeed Roy Williams, who left Kansas on Monday for his alma mater, North Carolina. The other candidates: Marquette coach Tom Crean, Gonzaga's Mark Few, Notre Dame's Mike Brey and Wichita State's Mark Turgeon, a former player under Williams.

Kansas' interim athletic director, Druce Jennings, said Tuesday that he'd even like Williams to have a voice in choosing his successor.

NFL | Traffic officer sues Vikings' Moss

A traffic control officer allegedly struck by a car driven by Vikings receiver Randy Moss filed a lawsuit against the player Wednesday.

The lawsuit in Hennepin County, Minn., District Court seeks more than $50,000 for emotional distress, assault and negligence.

Boedigheimer said Zaccardi deserves an apology "and she will get it — one way or another."

Zaccardi still suffers from injuries she received that night, and, even though she is able to work, she no longer is able to do the same job, the attorney said.

Staff and wire reports

Baseball | Cats' second game canceled

The K-State-Washington baseball game scheduled for Wednesday afternoon at Tointon Family Stadium was canceled due to inclement weather in the Manhattan area.

The game will not be rescheduled. The Wildcats return to Frank Myers Field on Friday to begin a three-game series with Texas Tech at 7 p.m. First pitch is set for 2 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday.

Defining the bases in the game of love

"They all blend together, actually."

Ashley Lucas | JUNIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

"First is a kiss. Second is up the shirt. Third is in the pants. Isn't that what everyone thinks?"

Michael Nation | JUNIOR IN MARKETING

"First is holding hands. Second is kissing. Third is a little more, a little dirtier."

Alissa Bombardier | SENIOR IN APPAREL MARKETING

"First base is a kiss goodnight. Second is up the shirt. Third means someone's naked."

Jeff Bender | JUNIOR IN BIOLOGY

"First base is a little tug and a feel of the breasts or shirt. Second base is anything but oral sex, but you're not naked. Third base is everything minus sex and you're definitely naked."

Adam Ostmeyer | JUNIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

"First base is making out or kissing. Second is under the clothes. Third is oral."

Kelly Ellsworth | JUNIOR IN MARKETING

"First is kissing. Second is groping. Third is oral sex."

Aileen Schell | JUNIOR IN MARKETING

"First base is making out. Second base would be exploring but nothing overly sexual. Third base is anything you can get without hitting home. How many times you get on base is what you're really worried about."

Derek Cattoor | SENIOR IN AGRONOMY

"First base is holding hands with a cute little peck. Second base is a little tongue action and maybe some wandering hands. Third base — clothes off and use your imagination. Fourth base, take her all the way home."

eight at nationals last year.

As the host team, the Aggies also will have an advantage in knowing their horses, Cunningham said.

"There's always that home field advantage," she said. "But we are familiar with the horses because we used to compete against them."

Until this season, K-State rode against Texas A&M and Oklahoma State in Zone 7. That familiarity will help K-State overcome the home advantage, Gigot said.

"That is the toughest region, in my eyes," Gigot said. "There are a lot of girls that I've shown quarter horse with, and they are very tough and competitive. It won't be easy to accomplish what we want."

What they want is a national title; a goal equally as challenging on the English side. Brown University, last year's third-place team, will lead a contingent of East Coast schools vying for the crown.

"It puts us in a better mindset because we don't know what we're going up against," sophomore Allison Woodworth said.

"This is a good opportunity to compete against other schools and show them what they're up against at nationals." A subplot to the championship will be the performance of Wildcat sophomore Erin Peery.

Since joining the team this semester, Peery has captured High-Point Rider honors for the Western team in her only two competitions. She will compete against her former school, Oklahoma State, for the first time.

Cunningham, however, said individual performances don't supersede team goals. That's the recipe that helped K-State advance their English and Western teams to the IHSA National Championships for the first time in school history.

"We're coming off a very big weekend," Cunningham said. "We're definitely looking forward to this."

would like to see the program handled through a partnership between the city and the school board.

"We have to come up with a community solution to this," he said.

Board member Joleen Hill said she agreed.

"This was first approached as a partnership years ago," she said. "I think we should ask to approach the city on this."

However, Board member Jim Shroyer said he was frustrated with the city and county's involvement in the future of the cross guard program.

"This one makes me angry – really angry," he said. "There's no spirit of compromise. We're the only ones saying it."

Maberry said the program's future must be hashed out in governing bodies, especially since the city passed a resolution to an ordinance that does not allow the RCPD to provide cross guards as a part of their services to the city.

The resolution to the ordinance was passed last December after the city realized they do not have the authority to require crossing guards from the county police department.

Superintendent Sharol Little said the next step to the issue will be making a presentation to the Manhattan City Commission, as well as having a work session with the RCPD Law Board.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES

By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled, or have already failed, you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight, or loses weight, the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.
2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating - how often and at what times during the day - causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.
3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

Dr. Tague is board certified in bariatric medicine. Dr. Tague is the medical director of the Center for Nutrition and Preventive Medicine at 1443 Anderson Avenue in Anderson Village.

Alleged aliens arrested

3 charged with identity theft after search

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Investigations involving identity theft continue after three people were arrested on similar charges Wednesday.

Consuelo Luna, 29; Luis M. Urena Sr., 48; and Luis O. Urena Jr., 20, were arrested during search warrants at 510 10th Street in Ogden, Kan., and 2423 Charolais in Manhattan, according to a press release from the Riley County Police Department.

The RCPD is alleging the use of Social Security numbers not issued to them, Capt. Gary Grubbs of the RCPD said.

The arrests were the result of a six-month investigation, and Grubbs said similar investigations are ongoing.

"These types of offenses are still under investigation," Grubbs said. He did not offer further information.

Luna was charged with one felony count of identity theft and one felony count of making false information. Bond was set at $5,000.

Urena Sr. was charged with four felony counts of identity theft and four felony counts of making false identification. Bond was set at $20,000.

Urena Jr. was charged with two felony counts of identity theft and two felony counts of making false information. Bond was set at $10,000.

Charges from the Federal Criminal and Immigration charges also are anticipated for all three men.

Rebecca J. Urena, 17, and Rebecca Urena, 50, were arrested by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services for immigration violations.

Documents and three vehicles were seized during the investigation, the press release said.

2-day fall break issue introduced

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A resolution for the University Calendar Committee to continue the two-day fall break and stop day before finals week was introduced to legislation at Thursday night's Student Senate meeting.

Senators also took final action on the bill, passing it with a narrow vote of 26-19-1.

Under the bill, Student Senate strongly encourages the calendar for the 2004-05 school year to look similar to the 2003-04 break, with two days off for fall break and a stop day the Friday prior to finals week.

With the additional two days to the calendar, this fall semester will begin with classes on a Wednesday rather than starting on a Monday.

John O'Hara, student body president, said the reason the bill was introduced to this term's Senate body was because the calendar committee sets the school calendar one year in advance.

"We believe it's important and beneficial to have students have a break and a stop day,"

Saddam's kin captured

Barzan Hasan taken prisoner

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

American commandos captured a half brother of Saddam Hussein on Thursday, the latest success in a campaign to round up insiders from the former regime. U.S. troops thwarted a Baghdad bank robbery over the protests of Iraqis eager to share in the loot.

As U.S. forces struggled to restore order in Iraq, FBI Director Robert Mueller announced agents had been detailed to help recover antiquities looted from museums in Baghdad and elsewhere. Agents will aid international efforts to recover stolen items "on both the open and black markets," he said.

America At War

With the fighting all but over, the USS Constellation steamed from the Persian Gulf for its home port, carrying dozens of warplanes no longer needed to bomb Iraqi forces into submission. It was the second aircraft carrier ordered home in recent days.

Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks announced the capture of Barzan Ibrahim Hasan, telling reporters he was an adviser to Saddam "with extensive knowledge of the regime's inner workings." His face was on the five of clubs in the Pentagon's deck of most-wanted Iraqis.

A U.S. intelligence official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Barzan Hasan had been a presidential adviser to Saddam's regime since 1998, but had a shaky relationship with his half brother and was not part of the regime's inner circle.

BUNNY HOP

The Easter Bunny leads a group of children in a hopping contest at the Thomas J. Frith Community Center. The Jardine Terrace Apartments sponsored an Easter egg hunt for the children of its residents followed by other activities such as dying eggs and playing Simon Says.

Easter games entertain Jardine children, families

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Let's see who can do the best bunny hop.

That was just one of the activities children participated in during Jardine's annual Easter egg hunt Thursday afternoon, funded by the Jardine Terrace Apartments and Student Senate.

Children searched for candy-filled eggs at Thomas J. Frith Community Center, where children came out to play games and talk to the Easter Bunny.

"This is a Jardine program we do every year to get the Jardine community together," said Ujwala Vaidya, graduate student in business administration and assistant coordinator for Jardine.

"This helps get the graduates, visiting scholars, non-traditional students and their families to get to know each other and get an exchange of cultures."

Jardine coordinators and members of the Student Affairs Committee for senate hid 350 brightly colored plastic eggs filled with candy and tickets that could be exchanged for prizes. About 45 children, ages 3 to 12, made a run for it, but the egg hunt didn't last as long as originally planned.

"It was over so fast, like five to 10 minutes," Vaidya said.

"One kid came late and didn't get any eggs, so we just gave him candy."

After the egg hunt, children colored and decorated hard-boiled eggs and made carrot bags, which are plastic bags filled with orange jellybeans and tied with green ribbons.

First-time Easter egg hunter Malory Prater, 6, participated in the egg hunt and various activities.

"I got candy, climbed a tree and made a carrot," she said.

Senate members interacted with the children and got to know their families.

"Some of the members helped with the egg dying, helped with other Easter crafts and got to know the kids and their families, which was one of our objectives," said Eleri Griffin, sophomore in human ecology and Student Affairs Committee chair. "Each year, we have our end-of-the-year project, and we wanted to get involved with the K-State community. We wanted to do

Landmark women's activist speaks about leadership roles

By Rachel Krier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sarah Weddington walked out and began her speech, "Some Leaders are Born Women," by leaving the stage and meeting the audience on its level. She removed the microphone from the stand and said, "I think I'm going to come down to the floor because I can."

Weddington, who is most known for successfully arguing the Supreme Court case Roe v. Wade in 1973, said life is a series of course actions.

She said that if people had asked her in high school if she would like to argue a case to the Supreme Court, serve on the Texas legislature or be President Carter's assistant, she would have told them that she wanted to teach eighth graders to appreciate "Beowulf."

"Your lives will have a series of course changes. You just start in a direction, make a course decision and move from there," Weddington said. "I think it's good to change majors in college - it's a precursor to life."

Just as Weddington defined life as a series of decisions, she defined leadership as a process of observing, learning and practicing.

"We have to do things that we're not sure that we can do perfectly," Weddington said.

"Leadership is the willingness to leave your thumb print. Think about what should be different in this world and how you can be a part of that."

The critical eye, Weddington said, learns by watching other people, and then adapting for itself what works best and avoiding what doesn't work well. She also said college is the best time to practice leadership because of the support and guidance available from other, more experienced people.

Janae Casten, sophomore in human ecology, said the concept of the critical eye and

CAMPUS CONNECTION

Ribbons support U.S. troops

By Jessica Packard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Yellow ribbons are popping up all over the country, including Manhattan, to show support for troops serving in Iraq.

Mark Parillo, associate professor of history, said displaying yellow ribbons did not originally start with the military in mind.

Campus Connection

Each week examine a story that affects K-State as well as another campus in the United States.

The song, written by Orlando and Dawn, is about a convict who wants to know if he will be accepted back into his community despite his mistake.

Dale Herspring, professor of political science, said the idea of using yellow ribbons became associated with the military when Americans were held hostage in Iran.

"Our embassy was seized in Tehran and held hostage until Ronald Reagan took office," Herspring said.

"Tying yellow ribbons became a sign in bringing them back."

Manhattan residents are tying yellow ribbons in hopes the troops in Iraq will return safely too.

Manhattan resident and retired teacher Garry Patterson said he decorated his house and yard because his niece is serving in the Middle East.

"Intelligence can't tell us where she is, but we can send mail that will be forwarded to her," Patterson said.

Jeanel Drake | COLLEGIAN
Yellow ribbons adorn the porch of a local residence.

Manhattan residents are not alone in their support for the troops.

Last weekend the City of Manhattan sponsored "We Support Our Troops" weekend.

Vice-president of Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, John Armbrust, said the city is collecting donations from various organizations to help purchase yellow ribbons to place around the city.

"We're trying to visibly show this community is in support of the troops and their families," he said.

Although the idea came from a hit song in 1973, Herspring said displaying yellow ribbons has come to represent Americans' hope for the return of American soldiers.

"It's the reminder to bring that person back," Herspring said.

Symbol established in 1970s

By Matthew Wrye
MISSOURI MANEATER

COLOMBIA, Mo. — As American troops are away from home during the war in Iraq, yellow ribbons are representing hope across the nation that they return safely.

Officials of Las Cruces, N.M., recently placed a 25-foot ribbon on a highway billboard.

U.S. Senator Kit Bond, R-Mo., is using the same object on his property in Mexico, Mo., to make a simple statement: freedom has a price.

"The yellow ribbon is a symbol of support for the men and women over there who are fighting for us," Bond spokeswoman Shana Stribling said.

"The more support we can get for our troops is definitely what we're aiming for right now."

Bond's tying of the yellow ribbon to one of his trees Monday is just one case being reported by the news media.

The ribbon will stay up, Bond said, until the troops and prisoners of war in Iraq come home.

"It's very important to soldiers who are in harm's way to let them know there are folks at home who appreciate them," said Arthur Waldron, professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania.

It can help boost troop morale, he said, especially in a situation like one of his fellow professors had.

"I had a colleague who came back from Vietnam and got spit on," Waldron said.

This isn't the first time Americans have used such yellow ribbons to support their servicemen during times of war.

The symbol first appeared during the Vietnam War and was popularized during the Iranian hostage crisis of 1979-81.

However, it can mean more than just waiting for troops to come home, said Michael Zuckerman, professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania.

"It's become a lightning rod of all kinds of displays of patriotism and disputes of patriotism," Zuckerman said.

Ex-marine says U.S. officials sell false image to military recruits

By April Middleton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He said he isn't anti-American, a terrorist sympathizer or a bin Laden-loving hippie.

But he is a peace and human rights activist and a trained former combat marine who would take up arms only for national defense purposes.

Chris White, a former marine, told a couple dozen people in the Union Little Theatre on Thursday the image military recruiters sell is sometimes deceptive, and the U.S. government has rarely used military for the purpose of national defense, which is its purpose.

White served in the Marine Corps from 1994 through 1998. His experience, he said, has since caused him to research and question the practices of the U.S. military.

"One of my main reasons in life is to discuss alternatives to military service with young people," he said. "They don't get the full story from the recruiters who come to talk to them."

Recruiters, he said, are taught to sell a positive image of the military. That image is inaccurate, deceptive and dangerous to those who join, White said.

www.kstatecollegian.com

What to know more about White's experiences? Read online about White's Thursday presentation.

Young people who sign up for the military, he said, are told it is really only a four-year commitment when it is actually eight. Four years are active duty, he said, and then the last four are on inactive reserves.

"They tell you that only the first four matter, because the rest is reserves," he said. "But thousands of inactive soldiers have been called back to active duty since 9/11."

Recruiters also have quotas for the number of people they sign, what jobs they enlist them for and the locations they are sent.

These quotas, White said, make recruiters mislead people into signing up for something different than they wanted to.

"I wanted to be in the military police, but I ended up in the infantry," he said. "In fact, every single person in Infantry 1 with me wanted to be military police."

Also, he said, the education benefits are not always as promising as they sound.

"I didn't get to go to college while I was in the marines because I was always training," he said.

He said the images Americans see of the military aren't the ones he witnessed once he was actually in the Marines.

While running, he said, they sang "We're gonna rape, kill, pillage and burn," and every command was followed by a platoon responding with "kill."

"The whole purpose of these kinds of songs and phrases is to make a person a mental slave so they act as one when the government wants them to," White said.

White also discussed U.S. foreign policy. He said too few people do the research and understand what the United States has done and how it has used the military.

Young people entering the military, White said, are told they are defending freedom and people. Often, that isn't the case.

"There is no other job that you sign eight years of your life for and put yourself in a dangerous position and can go to prison for if you try to break the contract," he said. "Because of the seriousness of this job, maybe recruiters should be more honest."

TO THE POINT Fan support crucial during spring season

Spring has taken over Manhattan, and as the weather heats up, competition has too for K-State's varsity sports teams.

Make time to show your Wildcat pride this weekend, by attending several events important to the university's teams.

K-State's baseball team needs your support to get back on the winning track. The Cats have lost 16 straight, but Coach Mike Clark's club is ready to put on a show for fans at 7 tonight against Texas Tech at Tointon Family Stadium. K-State will play at 2 p.m. Saturday and at 1 p.m. Sunday as well.

If baseball isn't your bag, Coach Steve Bietau's women's tennis team is serving up plenty of success.

Bietau's netters will play Texas A&M at 2 p.m. today and Texas at 10 a.m. Sunday at the Washburn Tennis Facility adjacent to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

If that hasn't piqued your interest, what about a dual with the University of Kansas?

Coach Jenny Hale's rowers hit the Tuttle Creek Reservoir waves at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The Cats swept the Hawks last season in Lawrence, and nothing could be better than beating KU again.

Yeah, if KU can get rid of Coach Williams, we can get rid of Coach Clark.

The grounds crew for the baseball team works harder than the baseball team.

If you ask me, I think Dana Strongin is a cold, stone babe.

John O'Hara likes to streak in boxers, and we'd like to see John O'Hara streak in boxers. Coincidence? I think not. Must be meant to be.

What do you know? We love Dillons Chinese, too.

MAMMOTH MISCONCEPTIONS

Perceptions of college distorted until you experience it

Letter jackets, class rings, purple and orange folders — all beacons of a tour group of high school kiddies taking their first peek at college life. I don't know about you, but I always feel like some sort of caged wombat enduring their stares as they amble after their tour guide.

Then again, who can blame them?

Have you ever noticed how much crap our high school teachers fed us about how college would be? There was the gloom-and-doom teacher claiming that when you got to college, tardiness would not be accepted, no one would care about you and if you had any late work whatsoever, you could forget passing your class, missy!

Then there were the sunshine-and-daisies teachers going on about how wonderful college life is. "It's an institution of higher learning. The people are smarter and more mature, the classes are interesting and informative, and having a roommate is one of the best experiences ever!" Right.

College misconception No. 1: The people are more mature.

Obviously, I'd never seen "Animal House" or any other such movie, but you take a trip to La Cygne, Kan., and then you can talk. All I had to go on was my physics teacher saying how everyone was so much more intelligent and civilized in college rather than the monkeys that ran around PVHS. I have yet to meet a completely mature person that isn't an uptight study-aholic. Heck, even the professors act like kids. But what would college be without flying Elmo kites or carrying a yellow duck umbrella complete with beak? I'm not complaining.

College misconception No. 2: No one will care about you.

"A campus with 22,000 students — everyone will have their own things to worry about, and no one is going to bother themselves about you." Sound familiar? True, with new-found independence, you are responsible for yourself (waking up for classes, homework, hygiene).

But when I got here, while campus was huge and there were more students at K-State than there were in my hometown and the surrounding areas combined, I didn't feel lost or forgotten at all. My adviser seemed to actually care where I was going with my academics. I had made friends in classes and people in my dorm who I still am close to, and while my roommate was the most evil person on the face of the planet and did her best to make my life hell, I spoke to strangers on a regular basis, made friends and had lots of fun my first year here, especially after getting a new roommate second semester.

College misconception No. 3: Damn bubble sheets.

College misconception No. 4: The classes would be more difficult and more interesting than those in high school.

OK, wrong on both accounts. My animal science and industries and agriculture classes are some of the most exciting and fun classes I have ever taken, but they are not that difficult.

The professors are friendly and make the classes fun. How can you not love a class that gives you a test before buying you ice cream?

The classes not applying to my major, such as general education courses and chemistry (shudder) have been some of the most dull classes I have ever taken. Chemistry has been the only one I have found more difficult than high school classes, but then again, it's chemistry. People who understand chemistry just aren't human.

Yeah, I had a lot of dumb ideas in my head about what college would be like — many of them put there by high school teachers who hadn't a clue of what college is like now that dinosaurs aren't roaming the planet.

But now that I'm here, I love everything about K-State, the collegiate experience, and while I still have to deal with bubble sheets, I'd have to say that coming to K-State has been one of the best decisions of my life.

Syria, Iran next targets for United States in Middle East chess match

The chessboard has become such a cliché in international relations.

That's too bad, because when used properly, it is a very apt analogy.

The strategy involved, the struggle for positioning, the sacrifices, the final triumphant end game all have their parallels in modern politics.

Some players, myself included, believe one of the most important aspects of chess is the pawn battle.

These eight pieces are almost worthless when matched up individually with superior pieces, but en masse, they are powerful.

Plus, you never know when one will be promoted to a higher level of power.

So it is with the Shiites of Iraq. They number roughly 12 million, and winning their hearts is the key to winning both wars in the area — the physical conflict and the larger political struggle for supremacy in the region.

This is unlike other chess games, though, most notably because there are four players.

Ostensibly, America, France, Iran and Syria are playing for their own advantage, but throw in certain alliances, and the game becomes even more cutthroat.

The Islamic Republic is trying to build good relations with the United States, yet spoke out Wednesday in support of Syria. France is supposedly our NATO ally, but has placed Shiite interests ahead of obligations to its most powerful friend at least once before.

Indeed, the Iranian revolution was effectively born outside Paris, where Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini dwelt in exile.

The loyalty of the pawns is being bid upon; the currency is the words of diplomats and friends to prominent Shiite leaders.

For America, there can be no victory in Iraq unless a stable democratic government is set up.

This absolutely requires the cooperation and participation of most, if not all, the Shiite groups in the country.

Current talks in Ur are meaningless as long as the Shiites boycott the American presence.

Meanwhile, French diplomats are reportedly in Tehran, trying to sway SAIRI, a large Shiite fundamentalist group based in Iran, to actively oppose the Americans. In this way, France is acting directly against American interests.

This is but one aspect of the game. Another revolves around the members and weapons of Saddam's regime, most of which are assuredly in Syria at this time.

There is evidence that some of these officials are seeking asylum in France as well. Iraqi nuclear scientist Jafer Jafer was captured in Jordan, and he subsequently admitted his ultimate destination was Paris.

Documents are coming to light in Baghdad suggesting the relationship between Saddam and Syria's President Bashar Assad was much closer than previously thought. Now, with a new friend in France, they seek to undermine the justification for the American invasion.

So, Syria is hiding Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, so America will lose face when we cannot find what we came looking for in Iraq.

This is the reason for the White House's three-fold demand to Syria: Turn over all Iraqi regime officials, weapons of mass destruction and officials of Hamas, Hizbollah and Islamic Jihad on Syrian soil.

This last is an attempt to extend the war on terrorism by eliminating important officials in these organizations that attack Israel regularly and may have been in Iraq the last few months fighting American and British soldiers.

Some Arab countries, like Saudi Arabia, are pleading with Assad to cooperate, but it looks like he will ignore them as Saddam did months ago.

Most have spoken out in favor of Syria, including Iran, which has pledged mutual defense and refused to recognize Iraq's interim government.

At this point, it is apparent that President Bush will not fool around for long with countries that oppose our interests in this way. If Assad and Iran's President Khatami refuse to look at the examples of Iraq and Afghanistan and learn from them, I feel great pity for them. Most likely, they will be out of power and on the run soon, like Saddam and Osama bin Laden, hunted everywhere they go.

For now, Bush will concentrate on rebuilding Iraq, refreshing the military deployments and keeping North Korea in heel with recently announced talks. Actions against Syria and Iran will consist of diplomatic pressure, economic sanctions and undercover operations against Iraqi and terrorist targets.

Make no mistake, though — this war is not over. America has good position, but we aren't ready to checkmate yet.

Hotels house soldiers

Contract to alleviate housing issues for remaining troops

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six area hotels and motels have signed on to help alleviate housing shortages at Fort Riley. The shuffle of active-duty and reserve soldiers at Fort Riley is forcing about 400 reserve soldiers to live off the post during their deployment to the fort, deputy media relations officer for Fort Riley, Christie Vanover, said.

The soldiers previously were living in hotels and motels in the area but were often forced out during peak times, such as weekend football games.

A $2.6 million contract went into effect April 10 that will ensure 190 rooms in Junction City and Manhattan for the soldiers, Vanover said.

Brad Everett, general manager of Fairfield Inn, said his hotel decided to reserve 20 rooms during the next year for Fort Riley soldiers.

"It's the duty of the community to take care of those who have volunteered to defend their country," he said.

The soldiers will receive all the amenities and services of regular hotel customers, Everett said. The hotel also will provide some extra benefits for the soldiers, he said, such as care packages, pizza parties and movie tickets.

Although some business may be lost during peak times because 20 rooms already are reserved for the soldiers, Everett said it will be a "wash" because they also will be living there during non-peak times.

"We're not cutting any corners," he said. "We're going to do some little things that aren't necessarily expected, but that will enhance their experience not only at Fairfield Inn, but during their time in Manhattan as well."

The Fairfield Inn and the Holiday Inn in Manhattan are part of the agreement, as well as four other hotels and motels in Junction City.

Vanover said most of the 10,500 active-duty soldiers stationed at Fort Riley live in the area, but another 5,000 reserves and National Guardsmen were called to active duty and are living at the post. The 400 soldiers who will be utilizing the area hotels and motels are reserve soldiers called up to fulfill training duties of the Fort Riley soldiers.

Everett said he was glad Fairfield Inn could play a role in housing the soldiers but that he wished more area hotels would have stepped up.

"The biggest issue," he said, "is getting the soldiers accommodated."

WAR | Crime abounds in Iraq's capital city after military invasion

the United Nations in Geneva from 1989 to 1998.

Earlier, from 1979 to 1983, he headed Iraq's Mukhabarat, or intelligence service, a period when the organization arranged executions of regime opponents in Iraq and overseas, the official said.

Brooks provided scant details of the operation that netted Barzan Hasan, saying he was taken inside Baghdad and U.S. special forces were aided by Marines.

He said there were no casualties.

Another of Saddam's three half brothers, Watban Ibrahim Hasan, was captured earlier by U.S. forces.

The third has not been found.

American forces have been criticized for failing to stop looting in several Iraqi cities, and there have been complaints, as well, that humanitarian relief has been slow in arriving.

But Marines foiled a brazen act of lawlessness during the day when they interrupted a robbery-in-progress at a branch of the al-Rashid Bank and took away $4 million for safekeeping.

Thieves had blown a hole in the vault and dropped children in to bring out fistfuls of cash. As word spread that the robbery was under way, Iraqis gathered, saying they had accounts at the branch, and a riot broke out.

Marines broke it up — over the protests of Iraqis not involved in the robbery — and removed $4 million in American dollars. The thieves were arrested.

"These people want the money and they believe it is rightfully their money, but they don't understand that the proper distribution is not first-come, first-served," said Col. Philip DeCamp, a battalion commander.

Gen. Tommy Franks, commander of Operation Iraqi Freedom, told reporters during a visit to Kuwait that "the looting goes down every day and I think you will continue to see it go down because the Iraqis are now stepping up and controlling the problems for themselves."

Still, more than a week after the regime collapsed, Marine Staff Sgt. Jose Guillen said power has been restored — by use of diesel plants — to only about 500 homes in Baghdad, a city of roughly 5 million. He said U.S. forces expect to get one of the city's power grids on line by Friday.

SPEECH | Speaker reiterates importance of women leaders leaving a fingerprint was something she wanted to apply to her life.

"Telling us to leave a fingerprint was good advice and knowledge to give to us," Casten said. "It's important to know that you are really proud of what you've done and what you've accomplished."

Casten said she attended the lecture because she had previous interest in the Roe v. Wade case and women's issues.

Angela Perry, junior in construction science and management, said she was there for the same reason and enjoyed hearing about the issue from a different perspective.

"You read about it in text books and you understand what happened, but it's easier to understand the atmosphere and everything surrounding that case when you hear it firsthand," Perry said.

Although Weddington's speech did focus on her experience with Roe v. Wade and women's issues, she said leadership is not limited by an area of interest.

"Regardless of the issue that you become interested in, to be a leader, the skills are transferable to any field," Weddington said. "I became involved in women's issues because that was the issue that impacted my generation the most."

Speaking to a younger audience, Weddington gave a few examples of what life was like for women of her generation. Women weren't allowed to play full-court basketball because they would get too exhausted; contraceptives were illegal in many states, even to married individuals; and women would be fired from their jobs or kicked out of school for becoming pregnant, she said.

"There were limits on what women could do based on attitude or laws," Weddington said. "March was Women's History Month — I lived a lot of that history, and the whole point was to give women more options."

"You all are going to do more than we ever did. I say that because you know more, travel more, speak more than I do. You have a much bigger image of what you can be."

Week eventful in sports

BEN FEHR

What a week in sports.

First, you have Roy Williams breaking a promise he made a little more than two years ago and skipping Lawrence for North Carolina.

I guess when he said "Jayhawk for life," he meant "Jayhawk until the father of the Carolina family tells me to get my insolent rear end back into the house right this instant."

Ah well, at least there's Jayhawk football to look forward to. It wasn't a great week for KU fans. But Williams taking off was a great story.

And then you have Michael Jordan's "last game," the latest in an installment of three such games in the last 10 years. It's a good thing, too. The less I have to look at Washington's uniforms the better.

Will Jordan be back in the NBA? Probably. Will anybody feel like they're getting cheated getting to watch the best ever for yet another "one last time"? No way.

So MJ is done, and what else? Ah yes, on to the National Hockey League playoffs.

Here's a great one. The Detroit Red Wings, affectionately known as "the best hockey team ever," was swept in four games by the Mighty Ducks.

We're talking about Brenden Shanahan, Brett Hull, Steve Yzerman, Sergei Fedorov, Chris Chelios and Curtis Joseph getting swept by a bunch of kids.

You have to hand it to Anaheim, though. They've got a wing that can skate but, like the Chili Peppers, can't stop, an ex-schoolyard bully turned defenseman that shoots a "knucklepuck" and a lovable fat-kid goalie that's the son of an Italian baker.

And the son of the baker goalie splits time with a girl!

Yzerman and Co. were simply no match for Anaheim's "flying V" offense, the keep-'em-guessing, right-down-the-middle attack employed time and again by Anaheim coach Emilio Estevez.

These ducks are not to be pucked with. If the greatest hockey team ever was no match, who can stop them?

Speaking of Detroit, there's another bunch of losers from Motown coming to town this weekend. The Tigers are coming to Kansas City, Mo.

The lowly stripe from Motown crawl into Kansas City on Friday to take on the addition to a growing list of feared American League juggernauts, the Kansas City Royals.

Well, maybe they aren't feared yet, but these Royals can play. You have to love 50-something, lefty-slugging catcher Brent Mayne's power out of the bottom of the lineup.

And who can speak ill of third baseman Joe "The Joker" Randa? The guy vetoed a trade that would send him somewhere besides Kansas City for crapes sakes.

How many times in the history of the franchise has a guy actually refused to be traded from the Royals?

Then there's the best right-handed hitter in the league, Mike Sweeney.

Kansas City even has good pitching. The Royals have given up fewer runs than any team in the majors.

The Royals, who have already swept Detroit once this season, will probably be playing loose this weekend, happy to be out of South Chicago, apparently the new locale of choice for some of the world's most degenerate winos.

What a week. Here's to the Royals, Ducks and MJ. And here's looking at you, Roy. Thanks for the memories and may success keep you far, far away from Kansas.

Happy Easter everybody.

Texas teams could prove tough to conquer

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's do-or-die time for K-State tennis.

Two weekend matches against top-ranked conference opponents could make or break the Cats' postseason dreams.

Opening the weekend at home against 35th-ranked Texas A&M at 2 p.m. today at the Washburn Tennis Facility, the No. 36 K-State will end the weekend by playing 32nd-ranked Texas at 10 a.m. Sunday at the same location.

Coach Steve Bietau said he is expecting Texas A&M to come ready to play. The Aggies knocked off Texas 4-3 on Tuesday, ruining the Longhorns' regular-season home finale.

"It's certainly going to be tough," he said. "We've faced a lot of good teams, but you have to say they're going to be on a high coming in here after beating Texas."

With the Big 12 Tournament on the horizon, Bietau realizes both weekend matches have serious implications, both in the Big 12 and in the quest for a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

"It's definitely going to have an impact one way or another," Bietau said. "Regardless of what happens this weekend, our players have accomplished a lot this year."

While it can be hard not to think about the future, Bietau said he is taking the same approach this weekend as he has in every other match.

"I see us getting ready for the conference tournament," he said. "We haven't looked too far ahead or back all year, and we're not going to change that now."

Focusing instead on the task at hand, Bietau said practices this week have been more relaxed to allow his team to

"We've scaled our practices back a little bit with more emphasis on recovery," he said. "We've got a long, tough weekend ahead of us and hopefully a longer weekend next weekend."

Junior Hayley McIver, the reigning Big 12 Player of the Week, has been solid for the Cats recently.

While this is the second time in three weeks she has won the award, Bietau said they will win or lose as a team, not individually.

"Our team is based on playing smart, playing hard and having everyone playing well at the same time," he said.

"If we're going to play better this weekend, it's going to be the same situation rather than any one individual or doubles team."

Hayley McIver jumps to make a return during one of her matches against Colorado. McIver was named Big 12 Conference Player of the Week.

Along with a top seeding in the Big 12 Tournament, the Cats are also in the hunt for a spot in the NCAA Tournament. The tennis version of the big dance is similar to basketball, with a little less than half of the berths given to conference champions. The rest of the field of 64 are chosen at large.

"We're happy to be in that position at this point in the season," Bietau said, "and we'll see if we can keep this ball rolling."

K-State hopes to end losing streak with Texas Tech game

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When you've lost 16 in a row, nothing comes easy.

As Washington left town Wednesday following a rain-canceled game, K-State (10-24, 0-12) still was left searching for its first win in nearly a month. The Cats' last victory came March 19 against Rider.

Now, Texas Tech (23-15, 5-9) comes to Manhattan looking to keep K-State on the second-longest current slide in Division 1 college baseball.

Coach Mike Clark said losing teams sometimes press, but he's hopeful the Cats don't press too hard.

"There's no question we've been pressing for some time," Clark said. "We're trying to get them to relax a little bit, get some confidence back, and get our edge back."

The Cats and Red Raiders will face off three times this weekend at Tointon Family Stadium — at 7 tonight, 2 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday.

The two teams hold the conference's worst ERAs. Texas Tech ranks ninth in the conference with a 5.49 ERA, and K-State's ERA is nearly two runs higher at 7.22.

Senior Kevin Melcher draws the start today, a pitcher that has impressed this week in practice.

"Where we get in trouble is when we get five or six deep in our bullpen," Clark said. "We just have to count on Melcher and Jim (Ripley) to do a great job."

Ripley will get the start for the Cats on Saturday. Ripley said he hopes he is the one who can get K-State back in the win column.

"Everybody just wants to do it for the team," he said. "It's not going to be just one guy. It's got to be the whole team together that's going to get the win."

"I know I'm not pressing," he said. "But I think some guys are pressing. That's why things haven't turned out the way they've liked."

Defensively, it's been a struggle as well. In the last 10

K-State second baseman Brandon Taylor receives the ball as Washington's Kyle Larsen slides into the bag during the Wildcats' loss to the Huskies on Tuesday at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats will play at 7 tonight against Texas Tech.

games, the Cats have made 25 errors and have not gone a game without an error since a 14-2 loss against Missouri on March 28.

K-State is last in the conference in fielding percentage. Clark said that might be due to the Cats' poor performance from the mound.

"It's a direct effect of the pitching," he said. "When you're walking a lot of guys and when you're throwing 30 pitches in one inning, it's tough. If we can work fast, get ahead in the count and not have so many pitches per inning, our defense will be more alert and more in rhythm rather than standing on their heels."

Rowing | Kansas Cup

One year after sweeping the Jayhawks in Lawrence to win the coveted Kansas Cup, Coach Jenny Hale's rowing team has plenty of activity lined up for this weekend to welcome KU to Manhattan.

Check out why Hale's squad is approaching Saturday's spring home finale with more anticipation than usual and what else is planned besides the race, an online exclusive at www.kstatecollegian.com.

MLB | Bond set for umpire assailant

A judge set bond at $250,000 on Thursday for a man who attacked an umpire during a Chicago White Sox game.

Eric Dybas of Bolingbrook, Ill., was charged with one count of felony aggravated battery and one count of misdemeanor criminal trespass.

The 24-year-old Dybas came out of the stands and grabbed umpire Laz Diaz around the legs during Tuesday night's game between the White Sox and Kansas City Royals.

College basketball | Turgeon off KU's list

Wichita State Coach Mark Turgeon said Thursday he was removing his name from consideration to replace Roy Williams at Kansas.

Turgeon, who played at Kansas in the mid-1980s, is 42-45 in three years at Wichita State.

The Jayhawks, who have been without a coach since Williams announced on Monday that he was leaving for North Carolina, are believed to have Illinois' Bill Self at the top of their list.

College basketball | Ford's family: He's 'OK'

Citing federal privacy laws, University of Texas officials continued to withhold information Thursday about an injury All-American point guard T.J. Ford suffered during a pickup game at a campus gym the night before. Ford's family has said the player would be "OK."

Ford spent about four hours in the St. David's Hospital emergency room Wednesday night. Team spokesman Scott McConnell would say only that Ford's injury was not life threatening.

College basketball | Bonnies fire coach

St. Bonaventure fired basketball coach Jan van Breda Kolff and accepted athletic director Gotthard Lane's resignation Thursday, six weeks after the team boycotted games over an ineligible player.

The school also accepted the resignation of assistant coach Kort Wickenheiser, whose father was the school's president.

The moves followed the release of an investigative report describing the men's basketball program as being in "turmoil." The report said the school president was "preoccupied" with the success of the program, and that the coaching staff was "in constant conflict, real or perceived, with athletic department administrators."

College basketball | WSU nabs forward

Illinois forward Kyle Wilson, who left the team in February to deal with anxiety attacks, will transfer to Wichita State at the end of the academic year.

The 6-8 freshman averaged 2.6 points and 1.6 rebounds this season at Illinois, scoring a season-high 14 points in the first game of the season against Lehigh. He attended high school in Plano, Texas, but was born in Wichita and still has family there.

WNBA | League, players negotiating deal

The WNBA and its players negotiated Thursday on a new labor deal just a day before a deadline to shut down the league. There was no word on progress.

"They're continuing to talk," WNBA spokeswoman Traci Cook said in the afternoon, adding there might not be an update until today.

Last week, NBA commissioner David Stern set today as the deadline for reaching a new collective bargaining agreement.

MLB | Canseco wanting company

Jose Canseco plans to profit while under house arrest for his part in a 2001 nightclub brawl.

Canseco's Web site is accepting bids to spend an afternoon with the 1988 American League MVP. The opening price is $2,500.

Bids, numbering 268, had been received at www.josecanseco.com as of Thursday afternoon, although it was impossible to determine how many were legitimate. The top offer of $30,000 was from a fan identifying himself as Joe Blow. There was also a bid for $0. An earlier offer of $1 billion was removed from the site.

Yorn alters style for increased radio play

"DAY I FORGOT"

★ ★ ☆ ☆ ☆

Album review by JJ Duncan

Sony is probably very pleased with what its done to Pete Yorn.

"Day I Forgot" is a collection of 12 radio-ready songs missing the quirks that may not have impressed some of Yorn's teenie-bop audience. But those quirks are what endeared him to those of us that sang along with the Smiths and David Bowie when he played with them on tour.

What you get is a super-slick album with occasional hints of the personality that made "Musicforthemorningafter," Yorn's 2001 major label debut, so irresistible.

He made the right move if he wanted to steal some of John Mayer and Jack Johnson's fans.

Instead of the driving beats of "Black," which Yorn has said were inspired by Joy Division, you get mostly tracks of slick guitar rock like "Carlos" and "Burrito." A lot of filler and four or five good tracks don't make this CD worth the cash. Instead, go buy the re-issued "Musicforthemorningafter" featuring his covers of Bowie's "China Girl" and The Smiths' "Panic."

Or you could wait for the major release of his first low-budget album, "Model American," recorded in 1997, before the business changed his music.

That's harsh, but in actuality, whether you like the album will depend mostly on what you liked about "Musicforthemorningafter." If you liked those radio-friendly sing-alongs like "Strange Condition" and "For Nancy ('Cos it Already Is)," then you'll probably adore this album. It's very well done in those regards and should please many fans.

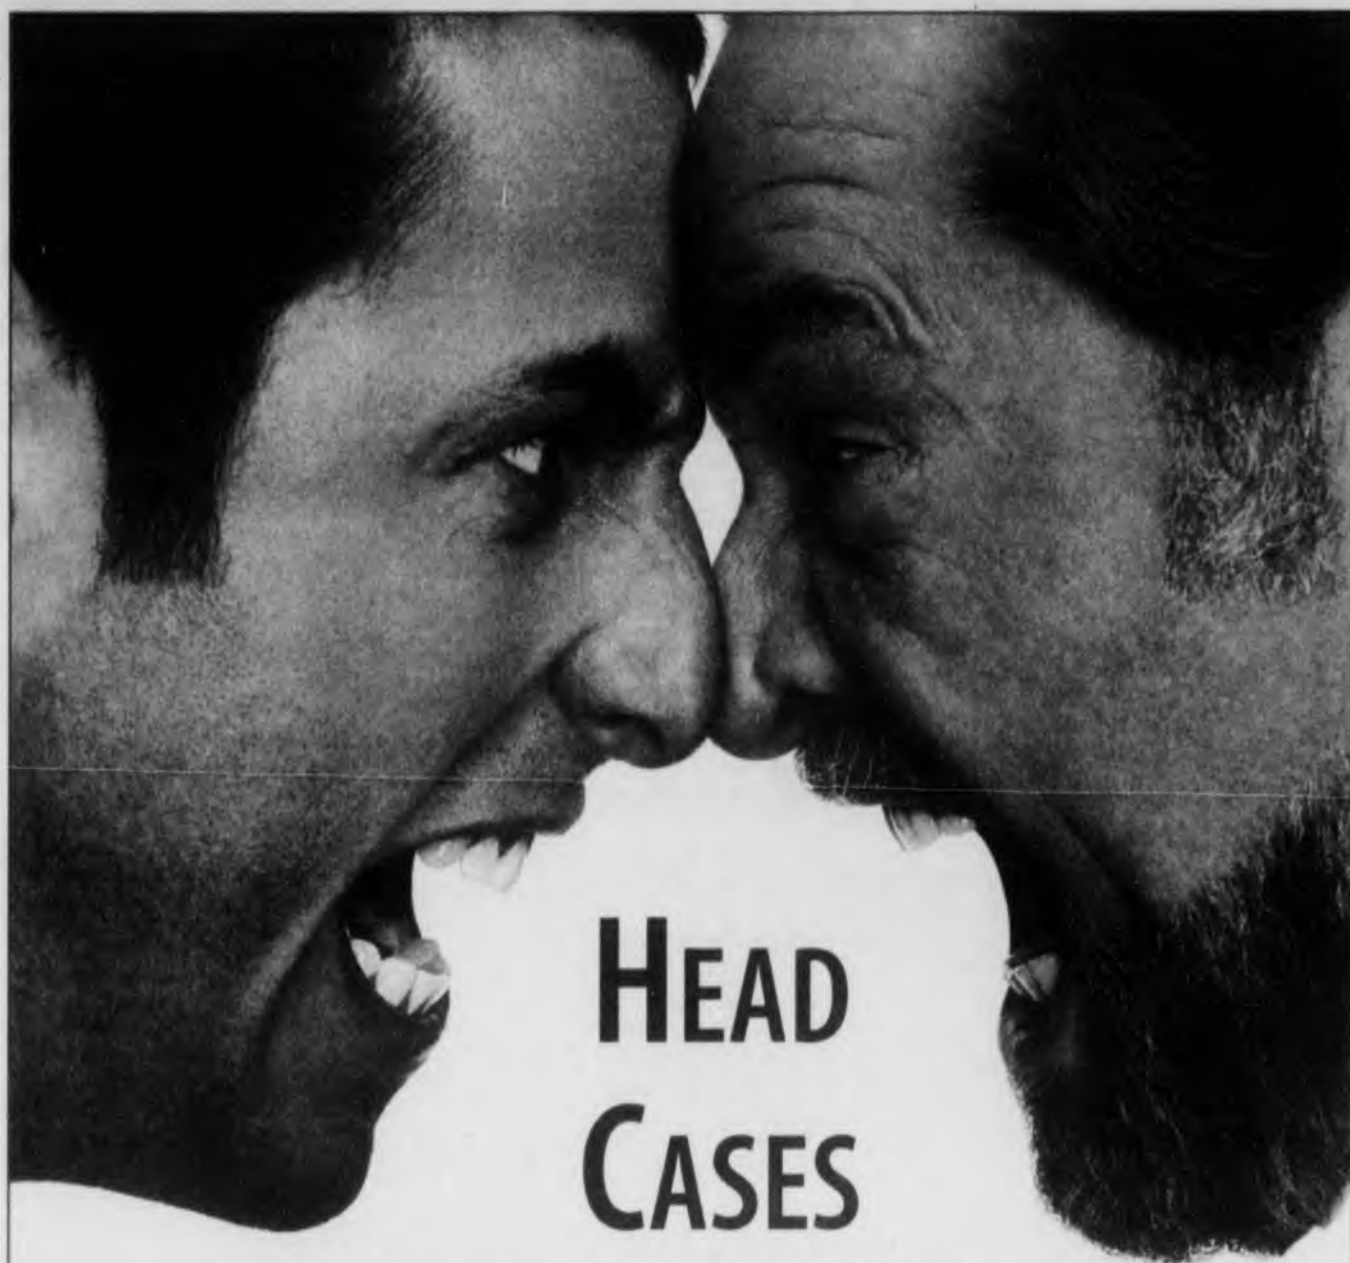

But if you liked that touch of lo-fi on "Life on a Chain" and "Simonize" or the driving feel of "Black" and "Closet," then stay away from this record. At least if you want to keep your respect for Yorn.

It's a lot like when Everclear did those "Soundtrack for an American Movie" albums, and you got mad because they sucked. Things have changed.

A few redeeming factors remain for those who will be alienated by most of this album. A few tracks are simply excellent. The opener, "Come Back Home," sets high expectations for a mostly dismal album. It's got a lo-fi intro and a driving beat that makes "Music..." fans feel right at home.

The late track, "Man in Uniform" is a good mellow track featuring R.E.M. guitarist Peter Buck on mandolin. The soft-spoken "Long Way Down" is this album's "Lose You," though not as strong. And Yorn ends on a good note with "So Much Work," when strings swell into a final chorus that starts "You don't have to live on your own."

The overall product is pretty weak, but any Pete Yorn fan will want to hear some of these highlights. Hope remains for any of Yorn's future work simply because he occasionally decides to shine in some of these tracks.

Though not spectacular, 'Anger Management' provides fair share of laugh-out-loud moments

Jack Nicholson and Adam Sandler. That's the type of grossly mismatched pair you think might somehow produce a brilliant comedy.

Unfortunately, no real magic is created in "Anger Management."

In typical fashion, the trailers give away most of the plot. They give away most of the funny parts, too.

Adam Sandler plays Dave Buznik, a quiet, meek assistant who does all the work for which his big-shot executive boss takes the credit. While taking a business flight, he tries to politely ask a flight attendant for headphones.

Repeating his request too many times lands him in an anger management program. Enter Jack Nicholson as Dr. Buddy Rydell, who becomes Dave's shadow for about a month.

We soon learn Buddy has some pretty wild moods of his own.

He sets out to make Dave's life a living hell, making all kinds of outlandish demands. And Dave's temper is nothing compared to Buddy's. "Anger Management" uses a mix of bathroom humor, silly gags and understated comedy. Sandler is at his best when he is losing his temper, yelling or hitting someone à la "Happy Gilmore" or "Billy Madison." Subtlety is not his strong point, however, and his attempts at that often fall flat.

It's Nicholson who is the real joy. Buddy's antics run the gamut from seriousness to sputtering rage to all-out wackiness. Nicholson is completely believable and fun to watch with his goofy, creepy grin and ever-changing facial expressions. In one early scene, the only action is Nicholson laughing for almost 30 seconds straight, yet the whole theater was laughing with him.

The film does have its bright spots. There were enough laugh-out-loud moments to make it an enjoyable experience. The supporting cast is terrific, featuring Woody Harrelson and Heather Graham. Cameos by Bobby Knight, Rudy Giuliani and Roger Clemens add a little spice, and Marisa Tomei, as Dave's girlfriend, is good enough to merit more time on screen than is offered.

At times, the story seems surreal and forced. The twist at the end is anti-climactic and isn't really much of a surprise. Furthermore, the action lags in places. It's not about to become a comedy classic that gets watched over and over again.

But all in all, "Anger Management" is a pretty fun movie. People aren't going to be quoting the movie for years to come, but Nicholson and Sandler get their kicks in.

"ANGER MANAGEMENT"

★ ★ ☆ ☆ ☆

Movie review by Wendy Gorman

White Stripes pay homage to blues, Led Zeppelin

1. Like an elephant, Jack White never forgets an influence.

White, the singer/songwriter/guitarist/spokesman for the White Stripes, loves the blues.

In "Ball and Biscuit," the raunchiest food/sex metaphor since Led Zeppelin's "Lemon Song," he claims to be "the seventh son," an old blues myth about being born cursed.

The riff steals from Jimmy Page, who ripped off every blues guitarist before him, while the vocal steals from Robert Plant, who ripped off every cat that ever had its tail stepped on.

White sounds like Led Zeppelin. He sounds like a dying bluesman. He sounds like he wishes he were born in another decade.

It doesn't matter the band recorded its new album, "Elephant," using 1960s recording equipment. What matters is, Jack and Meg White could rock a stretched rubber band and a trashcan lid seven times harder than 200 musicians could rock a studio full of Pro Tools (How many tools could rock Pro Tools if Pro Tools actually rocked?).

"ELEPHANT"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Album review by Matthew Webber

The White Stripes.

Jack White believes in rules of three. That's why the White Stripes only wear three colors. That's why White worships the blues, since it strips away music to storytelling, melody and rhythm.

That's why "Elephant" is so simple yet powerful.

Why, then, are there only two band members?

It probably has something to do with authenticity or the illusion thereof.

When White isn't channeling his inner sharecropper, he solos like your favorite hard rocker. He's real; he really wants to rock.

That's why the songs are raw, yet timeless.

When two band members rock so religiously, why would they need a third?

3. Like "White Blood Cells," "Elephant" surpasses the hype.

"Little Acorns" is the best song about rodents not sung by a Chipmunk. "Black Math" is your trigonometry teacher's new favorite song.

The first single, "Seven Nation Army," is a coalition worth disposing a despot for.

Jack and Meg White are not really siblings. They are avenging candy canes.

Bill could save $1.7 million

Governor to review bill today, would give power to caucuses

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius might cancel next year's presidential preferential primary. Sebelius has until today to review the bill, which already has passed through the Kansas Legislature.

However, a primary was omitted from Sebelius's budget, said Duane Goossen, state budget director.

If Sebelius signs the bill, party caucuses will determine who Kansas promotes to the national conventions and ultimately will save the state $1.7 million.

A caucus is a meeting of local members of a political party where a representative is elected for national conventions.

Caucuses in the past have included one at the county level and one at the state level. Members of the party vote and determine who is delegated to go to the national level, said James Franke, associate professor of political science.

In 1990, Kansas adopted a law requiring a primary to take place every four years. Before the law took effect in 1992, Kansas' political parties participated in local, regional and state caucuses.

"In most of Kansas's political history, party caucuses determined who Kansas promoted to the national level," Goossen said. "Some might say primaries are more inclusive, but it's probably prudent for Kansas to go this route in light of the current economic situation."

He said caucuses are funded by the political parties involved with the elections.

Other states have canceled their 2004 primaries due to tight budgets and the expectation that President George Bush will be unopposed for the Republican nomination.

Sebelius suggested repealing the primary law for Kansas to permanently use party caucuses.

Franke said he doesn't see any other advantage to party caucuses other than saving money.

"I don't think it'll increase voter turnout, because it's much more time consuming to attend a caucus, which takes all evening, than a primary, which takes five to 10 minutes," he said.

Franke said that while $1.7 million is a small amount when looking at the state budget, he understands Sebelius is looking for various places to save money.

The past two presidential primaries, in 1996 and 2000, were cancelled because the primary was scheduled too late in the campaign season to have much influence, he said.

The state has placed itself in the same situation as the past two presidential primaries, Franke said, and Kansas nominees already were effectively determined by the middle of March.

"Caucuses are just a little more complicated than primaries," he said.

SARS disease results in cancellation of weeklong Chinese holidays to prevent traveling, epidemic spread

By William Foreman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Jolted by a jump in SARS deaths and a tenfold increase in infections in Beijing alone, China's Communist Party stripped the health minister and the capital's mayor of power Sunday. It also canceled an annual weeklong holiday for tens of millions of people to keep them from traveling and curb the spread of the disease.

Just hours after announcing 12 new deaths nationwide, the official Xinhua News Agency said Health Minister Zhang Wenkang and Beijing Mayor Meng Xuenong were removed from their Communist Party posts but kept their government titles. The reported number of infections in Beijing increased from 37 to 346.

The party is the true power in China, and Zhang's and Meng's party posts were far more important than their government offices. Their loss left the two men greatly

Date rape drug indicator available

By Katie Copeland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you want the reassurance that no one will slip anything in your drink while your head is turned, there might be an answer.

With just a few drops of your beverage, Drink Safe Technology's Date Rape Drug Test Strips were developed to detect date rape drugs.

These personal test strips are available at local businesses and can fit in a pocket.

"We're always looking for products that are going to provide a more safe environment for students at K-State," Steve Levin, owner of Varney's, which sells the strips, said.

Colorless, odorless and tasteless, date rape drugs, such as GHB, Ketamine and Rohypnol, can be slipped into a drink — alcoholic or non-alcoholic — so that the victim has no way of knowing the drink about to be consumed could leave the person defenseless.

"I think students could really use

Matt Elliott | COLLEGIAN

By placing a few drops of a beverage on a card, Drink Safe Technology's Date Rape Drug Test Strips were designed to detect whether the drink contains date-rape drugs. The strips are now available at Varney's Book Store and the Union Bookstore for $1.99.

this. A young lady or man could be in an environment where, in an inconspicuous way, could test to see if their Coke is tainted and feel a little bit more safe about drinking it," said Levin, who found the product at a National Association of College Stores trade show.

The Date Rape Drug Test Strips can be used anywhere, Levin said, by placing a drop of the drink onto the strip. If the spot transforms to a darker blue color, a possible drug has been detected in the beverage.

Although the test strips might provide comfort to some by knowing their drinks are safe, others are skeptical.

"How often will people really remember to use them once they start drinking?" said Katie Biddle, junior in communication sciences and disorders.

While the strips could result in a false positive reading, Levin said he remains hopeful the product will help students to be a little more safe.

"I have a daughter that's growing up in a world where you just don't know. It could be the nicest kid from church, and you never know what is going to happen," Levin said. "This is a way that you can be a little bit more sure of what your environment is."

The test strips are available at Varney's Book Store and the K-State Student Union Bookstore for $1.99.

Ferrell commits to 26.2-mile Boston run, becomes successful in many marathons

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — It doesn't get more old-school than Boston, where the world's oldest marathon travels a short jog from the nation's oldest university, Harvard.

It's a natural draw for "Old School" star and "Saturday Night Live" alumnus Will Ferrell, who has signed up for Monday's 26.2 mile run from Hopkinton to Boston.

The 35-year-old actor-comedian has lost 25 pounds since he began running seriously, and has trained with coach Gary Kobat, whose acting clients also include Jim Carrey and Calista Flockhart.

"Whenever I see an old friend or cast member, they say, 'Wow, you look great.' And I feel great, too," Ferrell was quoted as saying in Runner's World magazine.

Ferrell and his wife, Viveca, ran in the New York City Marathon in 2001, finishing together in 5 hours, 1 minute and 56 seconds.

Jordan confirms playing days are over in letter

WASHINGTON — Michael Jordan, in a letter addressed to the game of basketball, insists his NBA playing days are "definitely over, but our relationship will never end."

In a full-page notice Sunday in newspapers including The Washington Post, The New York Times and the Los Angeles Times, Jordan's letter was a cross between a valedictory address, an Academy Awards acceptance speech and a love letter to the sport he began playing when he was 12.

It begins: "Dear Basketball, It's been 28 years since I saw you in the back of our garage. 28 years since our parents introduced us."

The 40-year-old basketball great played his last NBA game Wednesday, ending his career with the Washington Wizards after leading the Chicago Bulls to six titles while becoming the league's third-highest career scorer and perhaps the most celebrated figure in all sports.

"In some respects, you've become my life," he wrote. "My passion. My motivation. My inspiration."

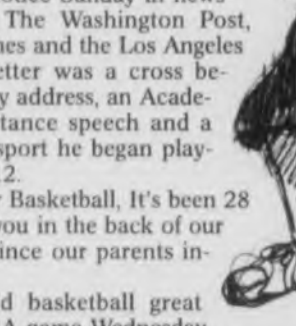

Jordan recalled the time he was left off the high school varsity in North Carolina: "I was crushed. I was hurt. I think I even cried."

He also recounted making it onto the collage team with coach Dean Smith at North Carolina, culminating with his winning shot in the 1982 NCAA title game against Georgetown. Basketball, he says, discovered him then.

"You found me in the corner and we danced," he wrote.

He went on to thank fans, five coaches by name and 10 NBA teams he played against for "teaching me the game behind, beneath, within, above and around the game."

The letter was signed: "Much Love and Respect, Michael Jordan."

Tiger all smiles at benefit despite loss

LAS VEGAS — Despite a disappointing loss at the Masters, top-rated golfer Tiger Woods was all smiles at a benefit concert to raise money for his Tiger Woods Foundation.

"I'll tell you one thing, losing is not fun," Woods said of the Augusta National, where Canadian golfer Mike Weir won the green jacket. "But you learn from it and move on."

The sixth annual Tiger Jam concert featured Bon Jovi and a performance by the Goo Goo Dolls.

"To be able to help kids, it's a dream come true," the 27-year-old Woods said. "It means everything."

Bon Jovi donated $25,000, Woods said.

With funds raised from the concert, the Tiger Woods Foundation will partner with the VH1 Save the Music Foundation to adopt the music program at Jim Bridger Middle School in Las Vegas. Additional proceeds will help fund other local charities as well as GRAMMY in the Schools and the VH1 Save the Music Foundation.

Romano hints at last season

LAS VEGAS — Emmy award winning comedian Ray Romano is hinting next season, the ninth, may be the last for his "Everybody Loves Raymond."

Answering a question on how he keeps the TV series fresh and original, Romano joked: "You stop after one more year."

Romano, attending a concert Saturday to benefit the Tiger Woods Foundation, indicated he wanted the popular CBS show to end on a high note.

"It's hard work," Romano said. "You start repeating yourself."

But Romano credited his writers for always drawing on their own lives and bringing new material to the show.

"The trick is to get out when you're still wanted," said Romano, 45. "Not too soon, but not too late."

Buscemi supports firefighters in budget fight

NEW YORK — Before he made it in Hollywood, Steve Buscemi was a New York City firefighter from 1980 to 1984 — and he continues to be a vocal and high-profile supporter.

The actor featured in "Fargo" and "Con Air" joined about 50 demonstrators Saturday to protest a cost-cutting proposal to close eight firehouses.

"I think it's a slap in the face, after all that they've done and all that they continue to do. They're just starting to come back," Buscemi said, referring to the 343 firefighters killed on the Sept. 11, 2001. "This is just terrible — a terrible message to firefighters because they want to save $10 million or $11 million a year."

Mayor Michael Bloomberg, seeking to close a $3.4 billion budget deficit, has proposed eliminating eight firehouses and said last week at least 30 more may have to be closed if the city does not receive state or federal financial assistance.

Warmer weather increases outdoor activity

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the weather heats up, more and more students are lacing up their tennis shoes to take a walk around campus.

K-State Police lieutenant and patrol commander Richard Herrman said walkers should be cautious about crossing the roadways.

"If it comes between you and a car, the car will always win," he said. "You need to use basic common sense and do not dart out into the street."

Molly Kail, freshman in architecture, has walked on campus during both of her semesters at K-State and said sometimes it is scary to cross the street.

"There are drivers who are in a big rush," she said. "As soon as you pass, they press on the gas. Sometimes you can even feel wind as they pass you."

Herrman said although pedestrians have the right of way at a crosswalk, they should still use caution before they step into the street.

"There is no question as to who is at fault if an accident occurs at a crosswalk. It makes no difference as you lay there injured," he said.

Amanda Millard, public affairs coordinator for AAA Kansas, said not only should walkers and runners be aware of their surroundings, but bicyclists should as well.

"Bikers need to know the rules of the road. They are very important," she said. "Realize that cars are bigger than you and be aware of where they are."

Kail said pedestrians and drivers alike should be more aware of one another as they travel.

"Pay attention to the people who are waiting to cross the street when you are driving and make sure the car stops before you cross the street if you are walking," she said.

Herrman said one of the main causes of accidents between pedestrians and vehicles

Evan Semón | COLLEGIAN

Public affairs coordinator for AAA Kansas Amanda Millard said bicyclists need to be aware of their surroundings. "Bikers need to know the rules of the road. They are very important," she said. "Realize that cars are bigger than you and be aware of where they are."

is inattentiveness.

"The driver doesn't see the pedestrian, and the pedestrian assumes the driver will stop when they step out into the street," he said.

"You should make eye contact so you are sure the driver saw you."

Millard said bicyclists should make sure to reduce their risk of injury by practicing several little rules every time they bicycle.

Those bikers who wear helmets can reduce the risk of brain injury by as much as 88 percent, she said.

Millard said that while wearing a helmet is important, it will only be effective if it is worn properly — on top of the head with straps securely fastened.

In addition, Millard said bikers should know hand signals and obey traffic signals, wear bright clothing and reflective material and try to refrain from riding at night.

Millard said walkers should also know the rules of the road.

"Don't wear headphones so that you can hear the traffic around you," she said. "Walkers also need to walk toward traffic or on the sidewalk."

Herrman said students should consider getting exercise indoors or on designated city walkways rather than jogging on city streets.

"I don't see much of a reason for people to jog on the roadways," he said. "You can get a lot of miles in and never get into traffic."

Herrman said joggers who would rather run around town should keep several steps in mind to keep themselves safe.

"Stay as close to the curb as possible and wear light-colored clothing," he said. "At night, wear reflective clothing and run where there are plenty of lights."

Millard said while road safety is the responsibility of everyone, drivers need to step up

Biking Tips

Amanda Millard, public affairs coordinator for AAA Kansas, suggests these tips for those taking a bike ride outside.

- Wear a helmet on top of the head with the straps secure.
- Know appropriate hand signals and obey all traffic signals.
- Wear bright clothing and reflective material to be seen at night and throughout the day.

Richard Herrman, K-State Police lieutenant and patrol commander, suggests these tips for walkers and runners.

- Avoid walking and running on city streets. Instead, exercise indoors or on designated city walkways.
- Stay as close to the curb as possible.
- Wear light-colored clothing.

and pay closer attention.

"The weather is warming up, and there will be more people out," she said. "Drive slower through the neighborhoods."

Baghdad's military presence thins as Marines move south

By Calvin Woodward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Army forces took control of Baghdad from the Marines on Sunday in a changing of the guard that thinned the military presence in the capital. Celebrating Easter, a longtime Iraqi bishop pleaded for safeguards against the persecution of Christians in the new Iraq.

The search for postwar order in Iraq was reinforced by signs that Syria might help ease regional tensions.

In Texas, flanked by two stoic helicopter crewmen home safe from Iraqi captivity, President Bush said Syria appears to be heeding warnings to avoid becoming a safe haven for Saddam loyalists or a destabilizing influence across the border in Iraq.

"They're getting the message," Bush said.

The president attended Easter service at the Ford Hood Army base, where nearly half the fort's 42,000 soldiers are deployed to the Iraq region. Afterward, he said he expected Syria to turn over any Iraqis sought by the United States.

Joining him were Chief Warrant Officer David Williams, 30, of Orlando, Fla., and Chief Warrant Officer Ronald Young Jr., 26, of Lithia Springs, Ga., two of the seven former POWs brought home a week after their Iraqi captors let them go.

In London, members of the pro-U.S. Iraqi National Congress said Saddam Hussein's son-in-law, Jamal Mustafa Abdallah Sultan al-Tikriti, surrendered to them in Baghdad after he was talked into leaving Syria by undisclosed means.

He is married to Saddam's youngest daughter, Hala, and was deputy head of the tribal affairs office in Saddam's ousted government. U.S. Central Command had no information on the reported surrender.

Two U.S. congressmen who met Syrian President Bashar

Assad said he assured them he will not give asylum to any Iraqis wanted for war crimes.

Reps. Nick Rahall, D-W.Va., and Darrell Issa, R-Calif., were the first U.S. officials to meet Assad since tensions rose over Syria's alleged cooperation with the Saddam government during the war.

Across Iraq, Shiite pilgrims journeyed by the thousands to holy cities and Christians packed churches for Easter, giving full voice to religious convictions suppressed in the time of Saddam Hussein.

But there were fears, too, that religious rivalries that had been uneasy — and sometimes brutally — kept in check would flare anew and consume the new order.

The Rev. Emmanuel Delly, retired after 40 years as Baghdad's Chaldean Catholic bishop, appealed for constitutional protections for Iraq's small Christian minority and said confiscated Christian property — including 30 Baghdad schools — must be returned.

"We can't meet Mr. Bush," he said in an interview. "But please tell Mr. Bush, 'I am asking you in the name of all bishops to give us a good constitution.'"

Saddam's government was officially secular but dominated by Sunni Muslims, who often put down Iraq's Shiite majority. Prospects of Shiites rising to power in a democratic Iraq have Christians and other minorities worried about a new era of persecution.

An estimated 700,000 Chaldean Catholics live in Iraq, about 5 percent of the population.

Some Muslim leaders in Iraq have already led demonstrations against the United States.

The United States has not put a timetable on its occupation but suggested it will take at least six months to reach the next of several steps — establishment of an interim government run by Iraqis.

THE FOUR BIGGEST DIETING MISTAKES
By Rick Tague, M.D., M.P.H.
Board Certified in Medical Weight Management

If you made a New Year's resolution to lose weight but have struggled...or have already failed...you are not alone.

Numerous studies show that over 96% of all self-imposed diets fail to bring about a significant long-term weight loss. Regardless of how much willpower you have, the odds are against you when dieting on your own. And with less than a 4% chance of long-term success, you may ask, "why even try?"

Fortunately, a medical specialty called bariatric medicine has discovered simple, easy-to-follow solutions to the four biggest dieting mistakes. The biggest dieting mistakes are:

- 1. Using a "cookie cutter" approach to choosing your diet. I call this the "one size fits all" diet. No one gains weight...or loses weight...the same way. In order to be successful your program must be individualized around your personal needs, your likes and dislikes, your medical needs, your family history, your environment, your level of stress and more. Unfortunately, fad diets call for everyone to follow the same diet forever which accounts for such a dismal success rate.
- 2. No medical monitoring of your weight loss. This may lead to losing muscle and even bone versus losing body fat. Losing muscle causes your metabolism to slow down and contributes greatly to eventual weight regain and makes losing weight "the next time" even more difficult. Weight loss must be medically monitored to insure that what you are eating - how often and at what times during the day - causes you to melt away fat...not muscle.
- 3. Attempting to fight the "cravings battle" alone. Let's face it, cravings can be an almost impossible "enemy" to fight. The reason is that cravings are hardwired into your body's natural self-protection system.

Brain chemicals causing cravings is one of the ways your body preserves itself from starvation. Of course changing your eating habits by dieting doesn't mean you are starving, but your body doesn't know that. Fortunately, using an individualized high nutrient program, adjusting meal frequency, and other medical techniques including appetite suppressants (when appropriate and only if needed), can eliminate cravings which then makes losing unwanted fat pounds easy.

4. Not recognizing there may be underlying medical reasons causing your weight gain. Obviously fad diets do not address your individual medical history nor do they evaluate and monitor blood and lab findings that can provide quick answers to your past difficulty with losing weight. A physician specializing in medical weight management is able to identify and correct hormonal imbalances and other medical problems that can be the key to a slimmer you.

Losing weight doesn't have to be an uphill battle, and more than likely past failures haven't been your fault. An individual's genetics, metabolism, medical problems, life stresses and food cravings can make weight loss on your own a very difficult undertaking. Make sure any program you undertake avoids these four common mistakes.

Also, seek a medical doctor who specializes in nutrition and medical weight management. Not all physicians have this specialized training. And if you'd like more information about how you can finally achieve weight loss success, please call my office today at 776-4443 to set up a complimentary office visit.

Dr. Tague is board certified in bariatric medicine. Dr. Tague is the medical director of the Center for Nutrition and Preventive Medicine at 1443 Anderson Avenue in Anderson Village.

TO THE POINT Eliminating primary best for state system

Kansas political parties holding their own caucuses, instead of a state-funded primary system, will best serve Kansans in future election cycles.

A caucus system, organized and run by individual political parties, cuts out the middle-man status of the Kansas government.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and Kansas budget officials have given signs that the practice of a presidential primary will be discontinued. This move is estimated to save $1.7 million from the state budget.

The ongoing budget strain is reason enough to find another avenue of opportunity to spend those funds. Also, Kansas, with a later primary date, holds little relevance to the overall nomination process of presidential candidates.

While some citizens find the caucus process to be more complicated than customary primary elections, the change should not have a significant effect on voter turnout in the general election.

The caucus process also has the possibility of instilling party consciousness and grassroots urgency in citizens of a traditionally GOP-dominated state.

The move away from the primary system is both financially and politically sound.

DISAPPOINTING DIPLOMAS

Grads deserve recognition of focused studies

Graduating seniors in Arts and Sciences will soon walk down the aisle at an ungodly hour to signify the end of their journey at this university. To signify this honor, each will receive a diploma saying "Joe Schmoe, Bachelor of Arts."

Bachelor of Arts in what exactly? In Arts and Sciences, of course. That is what you studied, right? Not what department or discipline you were in. Just Arts and Sciences. The College of Agriculture is the same way. "But wait," you say. "I spent countless hours taking (fill in the blank) courses. That is how I identify myself. I don't say I'm in the College of Arts and Sciences. I am in (fill in the blank)." "And now they are going to lump me with the punks in philosophy, the hippies in anthropology and the future law school dropouts in political science?" (That was a joke. I have the utmost respect for the fields of philosophy and anthropology. Political science — well those jokes stand.)

Why is this? Evidently, this is a tradition. A tradition? No, K-State basketball at Ahearn Field House was a tradition. These are words on a piece of paper.

I'm in geography. Go ahead and make jokes. As my dad said, "You know Fletcher, I already have an atlas."

But I'm proud of my department. I've actually spoken with every professor in my department. I know most of my fellow seniors. My adviser knows my name. This is, shall we say, different than some other departments I've been in (looking in the direction of Kedzie).

I spent several years bouncing from major to major and never really "declaring" one. That all changed when K-State threatened to rough me up if I didn't pick a major. They considered it an essential part of college. So I finally picked one. Now I find out it doesn't show up on my symbol of higher learning? Why did I bother?

Yes, that infamous official transcript might have a record of it. But I'd always envisioned my own little K-State wall of fame shrine to myself. My embazoned K-State baseball tickets, the sombreros I stole from Kramer Dining Center, my Tom Asbury autograph, and my diploma. My transcript can't hang in that company.

This issue has been thrown around for a while now. But nothing has been done yet. Associate Dean Gerald Reek told me that, "The Department of Arts and Sciences is determined to do everything it can to fix this problem."

But this issue is complicated. Associate Provost Ronald Downing told me this is more than stamping the department name on a diploma.

The Student Information System, the database on which all our student information is stored, is old and would have to be changed to do this. Then to print them, you are looking at a different set of software to communicate with the actual program that creates the diploma. All that costs money.

Slowly, the wheels of bureaucracy move like sands through the hourglass. I realize this isn't a serious problem. But that is all the more reason this should be fixed.

People identify with their major. People would like that recognition on this prized document.

We don't have to put every secondary, minor or department that the student took a class from on the diploma. Just put the main major on it. If they got a dual, put both on.

Pay the computer guys to fix it. I know computer people. This, and "Matrix" movies, is what they live for. Spend the money to get it done. It isn't rocket science (that is good, too, because any K-State sociologist could flash his diploma around pretending to be one). Let's keep future alumni happy with this easy but significant move.

We can't hide behind the budget and throw up our hands every time someone wants to make a change. The budget problem isn't going away. We have to work around it. Raise our $15 "graduation fee" (cough, Dean's slush fund, cough) to help pay the costs.

Realize folks, this is just people wanting to put a few words on a diploma. And it is taking pow-wows, budget talks, and hand wringing, just to get people to agree to discuss it at another meeting.

Can you imagine if they had a serious issue like, I don't know, a parking problem to deal with? Could you imagine how many years it would take to just begin discussing a problem like that? Wow, I could see that lasting a year or two. Maybe I'm being too negative. Thank god our administrators don't have anything like that to handle.

On graduation day, look for me behind the photographer. For a nominal $5 fee, I will personalize your major on your diploma with my magic marker. I've got pretty good handwriting and at least now you can be proud to be from your department.

Cross burning issue underscores the importance of free speech

A fine line in the First Amendment was drawn earlier this month by the U.S. Supreme Court when it reached a decision on the legality of cross burning.

The court reached a 6-3 opinion stating that cross burning with the sole intention of intimidation of any person or group is illegal. However, this leaves the cross burnings that are performed at KKK rallies perfectly legal because they are intended as expressions of political ideas.

This fine line is that of the First Amendment's distinction between threatening speech and pure free speech. This helps define the amendment's allowance of disgusting practices, like cross burning, as long as they are not intimidating a person or people directly.

Our government preserves each American's First Amendment rights, despite how repugnant they may be, as long as they are within the bounds of civil society.

Freedom overrules offensiveness in American law until the bounds of hate are crossed and threats are made. Practices such as cross burning are protected under law in the United States, proving how different and admirable our society's laws are.

Even with the protection of the most non-admirable actions, many with genuinely useful political thoughts are being stifled by society itself, not law.

Intimidation is occurring from within societal bounds and even has been used when our own president issued another division when he stated that you are either with us or against us after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

Political opinions, no matter how unfavorable they are, need to be heard to keep this democracy successful, whether they are from within the country or outside. Allowing everyone to express their ideas, political or not, is essential to American life.

Many walks of life choose their opinions for everyone else and don't accept others to be heard in their presence. This is what is un-American, to ignore the democratic and free laws set up to create and celebrate diversity.

Even the Campus Fourum, which has proven to be a cowardly means of political expression, is beneficial to the preservation of K-State's democracy.

The ability to express our political ideas freely and question political leaders' decisions was decided for us when our nation was young and is continually challenged. These decisions and distinctions are necessary and wonderful especially with the nation constantly being divided along right-wing/ left-wing or patriot/ non-patriot lines as it is today.

American patriotism should not be defined along the lines of being for or against the war in Iraq. I also commend those who have stretched the bounds of the First Amendment and brought about clarifications between the free speech and hateful speech.

I commend all of those who have used their right of free speech to oppose or support the war in Iraq. I also commend those who have stretched the bounds of the First Amendment and brought about clarifications between the free speech and hateful speech.

to do.

"There's never a dull moment," he said. "It really depends on your roommates, though."

Davis said the best part of living in a house is the freedom it allows.

"There are no restrictions on what you can do," he said. "You don't have your RA saying you can or can't do something."

Students don't necessarily meet more people in a greek situation, as many think, Morrissey, junior in wildlife biology, said.

"If you have people over, you'll meet just as many people," he said.

But more responsibility also comes with living in a house, Hojnacki said.

"If something goes wrong, you're the one who's responsible for taking care of it — you have to call the landlord," he said.

"Usually you don't want the landlord coming over all the time."

If the house isn't the nicest, you can get away with more, Davis said.

Cost of living

Off-campus housing rent per month can range from $425 to $1,400. For more information about living off campus, see www.offcampushousingguide.com.

"When you live in a nice place, you have to keep it up," he said. "When you live in a crappy place, you don't have to worry so much about it."

The house the four live in is old, Morrissey said.

"It's probably 80 to 100 years old," he said.

"Most houses in Manhattan are this old — this one just hasn't been revamped as much as some."

Davis said they have not had any big disputes. The men's landlord, Olsen Rentals, has a plumber and electrician on call if a problem should arise.

"Surprisingly, we really haven't had any problems," Davis said.

"Everyone showers and does everything in the upstairs bathroom, and I think I can count on one hand the number of times we have had a problem. It's usually just, 'Hurry up.'"

Morrissey said that just living in a house is not enough. The location also is an important factor.

"The thing about houses is you've got to have a good location," he said. "It's really important. We're right by the park, the bars and campus."

The men have a lot of fun together, Hojnacki said.

"Everybody makes fun of everybody," he said. "Our egos stay in check. As soon as someone slips up, you're going to know about it."

They also help each other, whether it be helping each other get up or motivating each other to study.

"We all wake each other up for class," Morrissey said. "If one person's studying, it usually makes another person feel like studying," Hojnacki said.

The biggest fights are over food, Davis said.

"We all fend for ourselves," he said. "We used to take turns buying groceries for everyone once a week. Now we all buy our own."

Despite the arguments, they all agreed that a house is the best place to live.

"You can pretty much do whatever you want," Hojnacki said.

diminished as political figures and possibly foreshadows their demotion or outright ouster from government.

The dismissals came two days after President Hu Jintao threatened serious punishment for officials who didn't quickly and accurately report cases of SARS, or severe acute respiratory syndrome.

Last week, Chinese leaders had declared fighting SARS a national priority after weeks of criticism that the communist government responded too slowly to the mysterious, deadly outbreak. The illness is believed to have originated in China.

Gao Qiang, an executive vice health minister, said the decision to cancel the May Day holiday beginning May 1 was made "to prevent the massive movement of people and the possible spread of the disease."

He acknowledged that the move "will mean massive losses in tourism revenue, but people's lives and health had to be put above everything."

May Day, the international holiday celebrating the workers of the world, has become a big way for China to boost its travel industry and pump cash into the economy.

The new fatalities raised China's death toll to 79 and its total number of reported cases to 1,814, Gao told a news conference. The most dramatic jump was in Beijing.

Pitching nixes Wildcats' chances at weekend sweep

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An end to the longest losing streak in school history and K-State's first Big 12 series win this season apparently weren't enough cover to hide the Wildcats' most glaring inefficiency Sunday at Tointon Family Stadium.

Another K-State starting pitcher couldn't establish consistency in the zone, and Texas Tech (24-18, 6-11) recovered its offensive punch midway through the afternoon to win 8-1 and salvage the final game of a three-game set with K-State (12-25, 2-13).

"You saw the difference between success in the first two games and not success today," Coach Mike Clark said.

As has become custom, the Cats' pitching was suspect at best.

Sean Clancy allowed three baserunners — two by way of walks — in a first inning that saw the junior throw 33 pitches. The Red Raiders wouldn't push a run across, but K-State's wound was exposed nonetheless.

Tech stranded three more baserunners over the next two frames as Clancy's pitch count approached triple digits. Still, the game remained knotted at zeros going into the fourth.

"We were fortunate to keep the score the way it was, but we've got to go out and attack the strike zone," Clark said. "That's what this is all about. If somebody's going to beat us, they're going to beat us, but I'll take my chances in the strike zone."

Meanwhile, Red Raider starter Dusty Beck (3-1) had no problem competing in the zone. The senior struck out a career-high eight and allowed just one run through eight innings.

"That guy pitched a great game," first baseman Tim Doty said. "He was mixing pitches, he threw all three for strikes, and he was ahead every count. It just puts you in a tough situation as a hitter."

Clancy worked himself into a tough situation of his own in the fourth by allowing Tech's first three batters to reach base.

Reliever Brett Bagley rescued Clancy from the bullpen by retiring the next two Red Raiders, but a Marc Chabot fielding error on a sharply hit grounder to second base plated the first of four Tech runs in the Cats set to begin Big 12 golf championship in Columbia

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last season, K-State's women's golf team had the advantage of playing the Big 12 Championships at home.

The Cats finished sixth last year at Colbert Hills, the highest since K-State joined the Big 12. But K-State won't get the home-course advantage this year, as the 12 teams tee-off at 8 a.m. today at the Country Club of Missouri in Columbia, Mo.

Coach Kristi Knight said even though her players have never seen the course before Sunday's practice rounds, this team could finish higher than in 2002.

"We're a better team this year," she said. "Even though we played at home last year, I would have liked to have this year's team there."

The statistics back up Knight's claim. The Cats' stroke average is almost 10 shots less than last year's squad.

Knight said the conference championships don't add any more pressure than any other tournament the Cats competed in this year.

"It's really not much different," she said. "It's just like any other tournament we go to, with the exception of the awards banquet we'll go to Monday night."

"They might feel extra pressure," Knight said. "I hope not. It's the same game. Sure, it's an important tournament, but they all are. I hope they're not putting any more pressure on themselves."

K-State takes the same lineup to Columbia that Knight has used for much of the year. Juniors Christine Boucher and Karen Quintelier, senior Miranda Smith, and sophomores

Wildcat netters drop pair of matches on home court

By Wes Marfield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You might call this weekend a tale of two matches.

That is exactly how Coach Steve Bietau saw K-State's two crucial conference losses. The Cats fell to No. 35 Texas A&M 7-0 on Friday and suffered a narrow 4-3 loss to No. 32 Texas on Sunday.

"They were two very different matches," Bietau said. "In the A&M match, we had the opportunity to do some damage in the doubles and didn't get it done, and then they played extremely well and the match got away from us."

The No. 1 doubles team of Petra Sedlmajerova and Paulina Castillejos led 7-4 against the Aggies' 58th-ranked doubles team of Jessica Roland and Roberta Spencer before dropping five straight games, losing 9-7.

The No. 3 doubles team of Maria Rosenberg and Jessica Simosa suffered a similar fate, opening its match with an early 2-1 lead before falling behind 6-4. Rosenberg and Simosa tied it at 7, but the Aggies won the last two games and took the match 9-7.

After the Texas A&M match, Bietau had practice Saturday stressing improvement in doubles play. If the results were any indication, the practice must have paid off. The Cats came out strong in doubles against Texas, sweeping all three matches to take the doubles point.

"I asked each of our players to find another 1 percent somewhere, and they did it in the doubles today," Bietau said. "We focused on that in practice Saturday because we let an opportunity slip by on Friday, and really felt like that contributed to the match getting away from us."

With the early lead, Bietau knew the singles portion of the match would be crucial in securing a victory. With the Cats' top three singles players all losing, the bottom of the lineup would have to step up.

It did just that, tying the match at 3-3 with Castillejos playing the final match against the Longhorns' Lindsay Blau. In the third and final set, Blau rallied from a 3-2 deficit and won to secure a Texas victory.

"In the singles, I felt like our shot to get them really was going to be at the bottom," he said. "They were all tough matches, and all you can say is Texas was a little bit tougher than we were."

With conference play over, the Cats (12-6, 7-4) will play the waiting game until Big 12 tournament seedings are

NFL Draft should excite K-State fans as 2 former Cats begin football careers

The bright lights of the Madison Square Garden theatre, expensive suits, slimy agents and, of course, the self-proclaimed football genius Mel Kiper Jr.

You'll see it all when the 2003 NFL Draft begins Saturday in New York.

Right here in the middle of Kansas, we have what could be two of the best defensive players in the draft.

Since Bill Snyder has been in Manhattan, 35 of his players have been drafted in the draft. The highest pick was Chris Canty, who went 29th overall in the 1997 draft. Canty left following his junior season and didn't pan out. An amazing defensive back for the Cats, he was a bust with the Patriots.

Draft day has rarely been kind to K-State stars. Michael Bishop was the runner-up in the 1998

Heisman Trophy race. He won the Davey O'Brien Award as the nation's best quarterback. But as the draft went on, he was continually passed over, again and again, until the Patriots selected him in the Morgan High, Mandi Peterson and Rebekah Green each won individual events for K-State during the opening sessions of the 2003 Kansas Relays hosted by the University of Kansas.

High won the women's high jump Friday when she was the lone participant to clear 5 feet, 9.25 inches.

Peterson won the women's javelin when her sixth attempt — a 156-0 heave — beat out Wichita State's Allison Berry.

Green dominated the women's hammer late Thursday, having four throws better than anyone else in the field.

K-State did not participate in Saturday's events due to inclement weather conditions.

THE GRAVEYARD SHIFT

Students balance school, college life while maintaining late-night shift work

By Rachel Krier

Need a job?

The hours are late: 10 p.m. to 6:30 a.m.

The pay is above average: 70 cents to a dollar more per hour than day-time workers.

And the work is physical labor, unloading boxes upon boxes and restocking shelves.

Maybe working the graveyard shift at a 24-hour business doesn't sound appealing, but some college students say it fits their needs.

Jennifer Pope works as a night-time associate at Wal-Mart to support her two children. She is taking the spring semester off from school, but last fall she was working nights, going to school full-time at Manhattan Technical College and K-State and taking care of her two children.

"I couldn't handle work, school and them (her two kids)," Pope said. "I'm going back (to school) in the fall."

But now, even without worrying about homework, Pope said her daily routine isn't much better.

"I basically sleep all day and have no life," Pope said. "But this job does pay a little bit more and is more convenient. I can have my daytime with my kids."

Also having altered his sleep pattern to contribute to his family, Andrew Couchman stocks shelves and unloads crates at Dillons through the night.

"I'm getting married in August, so I'm working here to pay for the wedding and honeymoon," Couchman

"Your body knows you're supposed to be sleeping at night, not during the day."

Tamara Mack

said.

Couchman met his fiancée, Rachael Ira, junior in kinesiology, two years ago while living in Moore Hall. He is no longer at K-State, but he is attending Manhattan Technical College to become an emergency medical technician. Couchman said he averages 70 hours of work a week between his job at Dillons and his second job, which leaves little room for quality time with his fiancée.

"I see him about 20 minutes a day. If he has to work that night and the next, then it's pretty much 'OK, I love you, bye,'" Ira said. "It adds stress because you don't get to see each other. There's no time to do anything fun together—no laid back time."

Despite the increase in emotional and physical stress, Ira said she accepts it as a temporary adjustment.

"It's a short-term goal, and sometimes you have to suck it up to meet your needs," Ira said. "I wouldn't want to be with someone who worked 70 hours a week as a lifestyle choice. It sucks, and I know he is exhausted."

Tom Edwards, sophomore in management and information systems and a graveyard worker at Dillons, said he trades sleep for a little extra money to support himself as a part-time student. He is taking nine hours of classes this semester.

"I had to drop a class because of this job," Edwards said. "I have to pay the bills, at least $1,000 a month in bills."

Along with the higher hourly wage rate, Edwards said he chose to work as a night stocker because it's a less popular job and therefore more available.

"Not many people want to work this shift," Edwards said. "The job has a high turnover rate."

Edwards' co-worker Gary King said he sees a lot of students hired who quit at the beginning of the fall semester and again in the spring.

"Everyone comes and thinks they can do it," King said. "It messes with their social life, and they can't deal with the hours."

One of those who can handle the hours, Tamara Mack, junior in animal science and industry, has been working the night shift at Wal-Mart since November. She works 32 hours a week during the night and takes 17 hours of classes.

A typical week for Mack begins with classes on Monday, then going to work at 10 that night and getting off at 6:30 the next morning. She then takes a shower and changes clothes to go to her 7:30 class Tuesday morning and then to her 9:30. Finally, by 10:30 a.m., Mack said she can get some rest for the day.

"Your body knows you're supposed to be sleeping at night, not during the day," Mack said. "You have to make yourself sleep instead of running errands, going to the bank or checking out that outfit you saw at the mall the other day. And since I work on the weekends, I can't go out. It sucks."

Despite the sacrifices and adjustments Mack has had to make for her job, she said it's still worth it to her.

"I like to be independent—to be able to pay my truck bills and rent and not depend on my parents," Mack said. "I make good money. I can go out to eat and not worry about it."

Madonna retools scrapped 'American Life' video, releases nonviolent version

Madonna's "American Life" video has been reincarnated as a tamer, nonviolent version of its former self.

The performer scrapped the original version because she thought its violent, antiwar themes were inappropriate during the U.S.-led conflict in Iraq.

The first video from her new "American Life" album—which comes out Tuesday—featured explosions, a runway show of couture army fatigues and Madonna dancing in a military uniform. At the end, she threw what looked like a hand grenade into the lap of a President Bush look-alike.

Lynyrd Skynyrd guitarist ready to continue tour

Seven weeks after heart bypass surgery, doctors cleared Lynyrd Skynyrd founding lead guitarist Gary Rossington to return to touring with the southern rock band.

Rossington, 51, underwent the quintuple bypass surgery Feb. 25 at an Atlanta-area hospital. Band spokesman Latham Nelson said the cardiologist gave Rossington the green light to return to stage June 13 in Karlsruhe, Germany.

"Since his surgery, Gary has done well. However, as expected, he has required a period of rest and rehabilitation," Dr. Martha Smith said in a statement.

Los Angeles judge nullifies patent for popular Hollywood camera lens

The patent for a camera lens that won a technical achievement award at the 1997 Oscars has been nullified by a federal judge who ruled its inventor lied to patent investigators.

Judge Gary Feess said Australian nature photographer James Frazier "made materially false and misleading statements" to the patent examiner.

announced. Play begins Thursday at the Plaza Tennis Center in Kansas City, Mo.

"If you go from the beginning of the year to the end of the year, and you said to me at the beginning of the year, 'You can go 7-4 in the conference with this team,' I would have said, 'That's a heck of a performance,'" Bietau said.

"As the year went on, and in particular as the spring went on, we saw things develop. We saw the team improving — people getting better — and the perspective changes. At this particular moment, I'd be a lot

BIG 12 | Golfers prepare for tough conference play

Sara Heffel and Stephanie Limoges will represent the Cats.

The Big 12 conference is one of the toughest conferences for women's golf in the country, fielding seven teams in the Golfweek/Sagarin top-50 ratings.

"It's tough, but I think that's part of the fun of the Big 12," she said.

"I take pride in being a member of the Big 12, and I know my players do too. It's a great conference in almost every sport."

The 6,008-yard course will present the players with many different challenges. One of those, Knight said, will be the difference in style needed to play compared with other events they've played this year.

"It's more of a traditional course — it's not a links-style course," she said. "It's not anything like Colbert Hills. We went over to the Manhattan Country Club and played it a couple of times last week because that's the type of course it will be."

K-State begins at 8 a.m. today in the first pairing. The second and third rounds will be played Tuesday and Wednesday, each day beginning at 8 a.m.

THE "PEACE" MOVEMENT ISN'T ABOUT PEACE...

It's about carrying on the left's war against America. When your country is at war, when the adversary has targeted every American regardless of race, gender or age for death, there can be no "peace" movement. There can only be a movement that divides Americans and gives aid and comfort to our enemies.

In his speech to Congress after 9/11, the President said: "We have seen their kind before. They are the heirs of all the murderous ideologies of the 20th Century. By sacrificing human life to serve their radical visions, by abandoning every value except the will to power, they follow in the path of fascism, Nazism and totalitarianism." He was speaking of al-Qaeda, but he could also have been speaking about al-Qaeda's friend and ally, Saddam Hussein, whose Ba'ath Party is a self consciously named Nazi party and whose agendas and means are just as lethal.

The so-called "peace movement" is led by the same hate-America radicals who supported our totalitarian enemies during the Cold War. They marched in support of the Vietcong, the Sandinista Marxists and the Communist guerrillas in El Salvador. Before that they marched in behalf of Stalin and Mao. They still support Castro and the nuclear lunatic in North Korea, Kim Jong-Il. They are the friends in deed of Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein.

What prompts American radicals to make common cause with such monsters? The answer is obvious: They share a common view of America as the "Great Satan." They believe that it is America — not tyrants like Saddam Hussein — that inflicts misery and suffering on the world. The targets of the 9/11 terrorists were Wall Street and the Pentagon. These were the targets of American radicals long before.

In the perverse minds of the so-called "peace" radicals, America is the "root cause" of all the root causes that inspire the terrorists to attack us. "America is to blame for what is wrong in the world. The enemy is us."

Today, as we battle the Axis of Evil which threatens us with weapons of mass destruction, these familiar mantras are rising on college campuses from coast to coast. Just as they did in the Cold War past.

During the Cold War, the radical "peace" movement bullied right-thinking Americans into silence. Our government lost the ability to stay the course in the anti-Communist war. The result was the Communist slaughter of two-and-a-half million peasants in Indo-China after the divisions at home forced America to leave.

Once again, the hate America left is attempting to silence right-thinking citizens. It is attempting to divide the home front in the face of the enemy. Even as we go to war. It is stabbing our young men and women in the back as they step into harm's way to defend us. It is attempting to paralyze our government again and prevent it from securing the peace.

We can't afford to let this happen. The time has come for those who love freedom and who appreciate the great bounties of this nation to stand up and be counted.

DRAFT | K-State players buck trend of pro failure

seventh round.

Everyone thought Chad May, the signal caller for the Cats from 1993-94, was a lock for a high pick. He waited until the fourth round to hear his name called.

K-State players always seem to go a round or two lower than anticipated. I have a hunch why.

Perhaps it's because K-State has the best coach in college football in Snyder. Maybe he gets the players so well prepared as a team, it hides their flaws when they play on Saturday.

But when they have to play on Sunday, their flaws are hung out to dry like a punt returner without the halo rule.

Snyder turns undersized and slow players into All-Americans. You can get away with that in college, but in the NFL, it's a rarity.

Terence Newman and Terry Pierce have the necessary size and speed.

Newman is a lock as a top-five pick, maybe even as high as the top pick. That would mean he would be stuck with the god-forsaken Cincinnati Bengals.

Anything the Bengals touch turns to garbage. David Klingler and Akili Smith flushed their careers down the toilet as top picks in Cincinnati.

I certainly don't want that to happen to Newman, but if anyone can turn garbage into gold, it might be him.

Marvin Lewis' other choices are Carson Palmer of USC and Byron Leftwich from Marshall.

Last season's matchup between USC and K-State showed us who the better player is. Palmer struggled all day while Newman flourished. He's a shutdown corner, and he might be the most talented player in the draft.

Pierce is beginning to field those troublesome K-State draft day questions. Who will draft him? Should he have entered the NFL early? He has struggled running in pro workouts in front of groups of scouts, but has been impressive in linebacker drills.

Pierce won't drop like a rock like past K-State icons. He is smart. Others have struggled in that area. He will make a defense instantly better. If teams pass on Pierce and Newman, they will miss out. They are two of not only the best-coached players in the nation, but hands down two of the best players and leaders.

Good luck on Sunday – especially Newman. If the Bengals draft you, you're going to need it.

inning. Evan Shahak's two-run single up the middle capped the damage before Bagley struck out second baseman Josh Haney looking to end the frame.

With the cushion, Beck cruised through the next five innings virtually untouched.

"I thought we were passive," Clark said. "We strike out eight times, and five of them were taking called third strikes. That's lack of aggressiveness. It's being up there with two strikes and not competing."

Tech posted one run in the fifth and sixth innings and added two more in the eighth to push the lead to 8-0 before K-State would build anything positive from the plate.

The Cats' troubles on offense Sunday were magnified by a relatively consistent offensive weekend. K-State banged out 15 hits Friday and scored five runs Saturday before being staked to one run on eight hits Sunday.

"We were satisfied with two wins and just kind of wanted to show up today and see what happened," Clark said. "Hopefully we've learned you just can't do that."

Doty plated the Cats' only run with a single up the middle to chase Buck in the eighth, but Tech's Jeff Karstens worked a perfect ninth in relief.

Clancy (1-4) shouldered the loss after walking six and surrendering three runs on four hits through three innings.

"I look at the defense, I look at the offense, I look at the pitching, and we were passive the whole game," Clark said.

Arrest ends 5-year theft investigation

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An investigation that began in 1998 may have come to an end on April 19 with the arrest of Michele Mathews.

Mathews was charged with four counts of identity theft, one count of aggravated false impersonation, three counts of theft, two counts of forgery and five counts of making false information. All charges are felonies.

Capt. Gary Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department, said Mathews' bond was set at $535,000. Grubbs said RCPD was not certain Mathews was her real name and officials are in the process of investigating that information.

"We have sent her finger prints to the FBI," Grubbs said.

Detective Brad Schlerf, who has been working the case since 1998, said the RCPD was able to make the arrest when they discovered that the suspect had rented a storage unit in Manhattan that housed a stolen Jaguar from Nevada. This discovery was made in November 2002.

After a four-month investigation, RCPD detectives have identified 15 victims of identity theft from Manhattan, Junction City, Wichita and the Dickinson County area.

The suspect had recently filed fraudulent federal and state tax returns in which she was able to receive a $4,000 refund. In an attempt to collect the tax return, the subject went to the Wal-Mart branch of the Central National Bank. At that time Junction City Police Detective Springer took her into custody.

She was then transferred to the Riley County Jail, where Judge Meryl Wilson set the bail at $500,000.

Schlerf said that even though the arrest was made in Junction City, it was a Riley County case because the suspect claims to live in Manhattan.

"The high bond was set because we have yet to obtain her identity and Social Security number. We also know she did flee when she was arrested before," Schlerf said.

Grubbs said it is expected that other agencies will file additional criminal charges soon. Those include Topeka, Junction City, Nevada and the Kansas Department of Revenue.

A LIFE REMEMBERED

Friends, family gather to remember K-State senior

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joshua Paul Kahler was a servant to his family, friends and the K-State and Manhattan communities. Those who knew him gathered to remember his life Monday evening.

Kahler, senior in philosophy and biology, died of a self-inflicted gun shot wound on April 10. He served as president of the student chapter of Habitat for Humanity and was a member of the KSU Red Cross Club.

Alison Wheatley, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said Kahler's death leaves mixed emotions.

"We gather with mixed feelings. We gather with sorrow at the loss of this promising young man," she said. "We gather still struggling with the mystery of his death, with questions we may never answer."

Loretta Johnson, associate professor of biology, told stories of Kahler's time working in her lab, gaining experience for his aspirations of becoming a doctor.

"He would often talk of his family - how much he admired his father, who was a doctor, and how he liked to go to his little brother's soccer games," she said. "With this tragedy comes the reminder of the importance of human relationships."

John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy, told of Kahler's other love, debating life's toughest questions.

"Our recollections of Josh are altogether positive," he said.

Programs were handed out at the memorial service for Joshua Paul Kahler, Monday in All Faiths Chapel Monday. Kahler died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound on April 10.

"We did not know him as someone in anguish and despair. Josh had the qualities and characteristics we hope to find in our students. We knew Josh as someone drawn to philosophy."

Beyond his academic life, Kahler gave his time to community service.

Abigail Maze, KSU Red Cross president, said Kahler was active in coordinating and teaching CPR and first aid classes.

Fall tuition expected to increase 20 percent

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will likely pay about 20 percent more per credit hour beginning this fall, K-State officials said.

Provost James Coffman said that if the Board of Regents approves the university's tuition proposal in June, an undergraduate, Kansas resident student will pay about $117 per credit hour, compared to the current $97.25 rate. That's about $296 more for undergraduate students enrolled in 15 credit hours.

He said non-resident students can also expect a 12-percent increase, while the numbers are less encouraging for others.

Business and engineering students will see a 25-percent increase, and architecture students can expect a 35-percent increase, John O'Hara, student body president, said.

Coffman said business and engineering students paying a $5 surcharge - previously established to help fund faculty salaries - should expect a $10 fee. He said an engineering equipment fee will also be extended to architecture students.

"The Board has not approved any of this yet," Coffman said. "This is just where we are with discussions."

The tuition increase, after last year's 25-percent hike, is expected to generate $10.9 million in addi-

"We have been underfunded a very long time and really need to make some badly needed improvements in the teaching system and infrastructure," he said. "Add to that budget cuts and state revenue cuts, and there has to be a revenue source to make up for that - and tuition is the only other source."

Coffman said much of the revenue generated from the tuition increase will fund enhancements in the information technology infrastructure.

"The student information system needs upgraded, and we need to replace a lot of lost funding in the library budget," he said. "Certainly, the library is a priority. We need to

SafeRide searches for coordinator

Program intended to provide free cab rides to students seeks vendor, set to begin operation

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The days of finding a designated driver are set to end in August.

Todd Kohman, SafeRide committee chair, said SafeRide will begin the first weekend after classes start this fall.

The SafeRide program offers students free cab rides to their Manhattan residence, as long as they can show a valid K-State ID.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of student activities and services, said the process of finding a student coordinator is underway. "The coordinator will coordinate and market the program. They will need to work at least 15 hours a week and need to talk to bar owners and business owners," she said.

Spencer said the program should be ready in August as long as it gets a vendor. The company with the lowest bid that can meet the requirements will be the vendor. Since SafeRide will cost more than $25,000, it will be handled by the Division of Purchasing in Topeka.

Carla Bishop, assistant director of purchasing, said Kansas law requires that any program involving $25,000 or more be sent to Topeka instead of being handled by the university division of purchasing.

However, Bishop has been overseeing the proposal before it is sent to Topeka. She said the proposal will be sent out next week and usually takes three weeks to send out solicitation for bids.

To apply for SafeRide

Those students interested in the SafeRide coordinator position can find out more at www.ksu.edu/osas.

The Topeka office will file the bids and send them back to K-State, giving the university a chance to find the lowest bidder.

However, Topeka will have the final say and get the contract signed, Bishop said.

Once the contract is signed, the SafeRide will be a done deal - at least for a year, Kohman said.

"It's only funded up to next year. It's up to next year's student government to decide if they want to continue the program," he said.

He said Student Governing Association decided to try the program for both fall and spring semesters in order to compare the use of both semesters. Kohman said he expects use of the program to be higher in the fall because of football season.

Usage reports will be given to SGA throughout each semester, he said, and SGA may decide to expand or limit the nights the program will be available.

To start out, SafeRide will be available on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. Upon one of the four passengers showing a K-State ID, the students will be given a free ride to their Manhattan residence.

Kohman said SGA plans to advertise the phone number of SafeRide and talk to bar owners to get the word out.

While SafeRide strives to prevent drunken driving, Kohman said that's not the only reason students can use the service.

"It's not just for people who are drunk. If you're out late on a date or studying and don't want to walk home alone, you can also call for a ride," he said.

Connecticut citizens sue over injuries caused by sliding

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

The town council in Enfield, Conn., was criticized in December for letting its insurance company pay settlements in two incidents last year to softball players who claimed they hurt themselves sliding into bases in city parks.

Mark Brengi said he tore ligaments sliding into third base and settled for $45,000, and one week later, his brother Scott broke an ankle sliding into second base on the same field and settled for $90,000. Said one Enfield taxpayer (and former pro baseball player), "You're supposed to slide before you hit the base."

Foreign fears

In March, London's Daily Telegraph reported that North Korea's Kim Jong Il is so terrified of triplet babies that the government places them all in special orphanages.

Quoting diplomats who have visited North Korea, the Telegraph said Kim might feel threatened because the number 3 in Korean mythology is associated with rapid rises to power. However, a North Korean official told the United Nations Human Rights Commission that Kim is actually helping the triplets by raising them in better circumstances than the parents could (because of the country's dire economy).

The things people believe

Brian J. Samdahl, 41, charged with stabbing a stranger 15 times at a Wal-Mart, told police he thought the problem was that his government-implemented computer chip was broken (Bridgeview, Ill., February).

And Jesus Santana, charged with marijuana possession, told the arresting officers, "I guess God got y'all to get me," since Santana had been rolling his joints using pages torn from a Bible (Athens, Ala., February).

Not my fault

A jury concluded in February that Lonnie W. Hinton Jr., father of a 2-year-old girl who was severely injured when she fell into a swimming pool at an apartment complex in Hollywood, Fla., was responsible for only 1 percent of the incident, with the complex responsible for 99 percent because the gate to the pool area was broken.

According to trial testimony, the faulty gate was fairly common knowledge among the residents, and Hinton had left the girl alone near the gate while he took barbecued food upstairs to the family's apartment.

Far from being censured for his lax parenting, Hinton and his wife were awarded $10 million for their own pain and suffering resulting from the girl's injuries.

Can't possibly be true

A house cat named Princess survived after being stabbed in the head with a knife whose blade penetrated the skull down to the frontal sinus (Green Township, Ohio, February). And another cat, Fila, taken out of a family home in Yuba City, Calif., in December by a daughter who wanted Fila to live with her in Sacramento, escaped and made the 60-mile trip back to Yuba City five days later, winding up on the parents' doorstep. It was not known if Fila took one of the three roads from Sacramento to Yuba City.

BBC News reported that officials at a prison in Sombor, Serbia, shot to death two guard dogs, execution style, in February after concluding that they had been lax recently in failing to bark when five inmates were escaping.

People who shouldn't have matches

Luis Chavez, 33, was arrested in Cypress, Calif., in February after he allegedly set off aerial fireworks in his condominium bedroom (motive unknown), leading to a $135,000 fire.

And a Massapequa, N.Y., high school student inadvertently set a fire that gutted the second story of the family home in January after he, in frustration, tried to burn some school papers on which he had done badly.

Least justifiable homicides

Jeffrey Lee Daniels, 27, confessed to killing a 58-year-old male acquaintance who had paid him $10 just to let him sleep next to Daniels but who then, to Daniels' apparent horror, touched him "in the area of his butt," according to a police officer (Barstow, Calif., December).

And Robert Carnathan, 54, was charged with the beating death of a 79-year-old man in a fight over collecting lost balls on a golf course; it was Carnathan's turf, but the victim wanted one ball for his grandson.

Week encourages energy conservation

By Mako Shores
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Think twice before throwing that aluminum can or plastic bottle in the trash this week.

Earth Day is today, and the Students for Environmental Action are urging people to do their part to help. SEA will have a table set up today through Thursday in the K-State Student Union with information about what people can do to help the environment.

SEA's objective is "ensuring a healthy natural environment and conserving the ecological community at K-State, the city of Manhattan and surrounding regions," according to the organization's mission statement.

The theme this year is energy conservation, so SEA is encouraging everyone to walk or ride a bike to school this week. In doing so, SEA will give those who participate hemp ribbons.

"I live close enough to campus, so I do walk," Steve Disbrow, junior in electronic journalism, said. "If there is a recycling bin nearby, I'll usually recycle my can or bottle rather than throw it in the trash, and since Earth Day is this week, I'll try to make more of an effort."

A lecture series is also scheduled this week addressing various environmental issues. The "While the Energy is Still There" lecture series will include topics on the future of oil, coal, renewable energy resources and Kansas windpower.

"I think the lecture series is really going to be phenomenal," said Ben Champion, teaching and research assistant in chemistry and former SEA president. "I think we've put together a really good series of topics. If you were to go to all of them, I think you'd get a fairly comprehensive picture of what it takes to produce energy and how you can modify the system to better fit our needs. I think it should be really stimulating."

Out of the events scheduled, Griess said she also is looking forward to the lecture series.

"There are two people coming from Lawrence — Charles Benjamin and Kyle Wetzel," she said. "They have both spoken here before and have drawn quite a crowd. I'm really hoping we can get some people out because these are very relevant topics, especially because we live in Kansas, and the potential for windpower is incredible."

For those who are running low on paper, SEA also will be selling recycled notebooks for $2 each or three for $5.

"We heard about this idea several years ago from another university," Champion said.

Student film featured in Union

By Abbie Whited
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students looking for something to do tonight can consider seeing the results of one student's film-making efforts.

"Cablevision: The Movie" is showing at 6:30 tonight at Forum Hall. Per Malm, senior in mass communications, enlisted the help of many volunteers to produce the film, which is a science-fiction romantic comedy.

"All of the cast members volunteered their time," he said. "And I also had a lot of cooperation from businesses in Aggieville, where we shot the film."

Malm, an intern for K-State's Channel 8, said he was able to borrow its equipment to shoot the film.

He decided to make the movie after receiving inspiration while praying one night.

"As silly as it may sound, I was praying and got the idea to make the movie, and I just went with it," he said. "Everything has gone better than I ever imagined."

The movie's plot begins with the manager of a struggling TV station, Malm said.

"The station is going downhill, and he's also having trouble with his girlfriend," he said. "So he hires someone who turns out to be an alien spy."

To find actors, Malm said he put up flyers around campus, but that acquired only a few responses.

"I got the biggest response standing outside the Union with a sandwich board and asking people if they wanted to be in my movie," he said.

Cliff Martin, senior in history, said he found out about the film after hearing about it in class.

"There were auditions, and I went to that," he said. "And then I found out I got a part in the movie."

Film screening

See Per Malm's "Cablevision: The Movie" at 6:30 tonight at Forum Hall.

Martin said this is his first film, and he enjoyed the experience although he didn't know what to expect.

"It was a blast, but it was a lot more work than people think," he said.

Martin said he made a lot of friendships in the project because of Malm's success as a producer.

"We all worked really well together. He cast a great group of people," Martin said.

"Cablevision" is Malm's first full-length feature film and is about 70 minutes long.

"I tried to tailor the length of this film to enter the UPC Film Contest," he said.

Malm said he would like to continue making local movies.

"There's a lot of stories to be told right here in Kansas," he said.

Parking Public Forum Manhattan

A public forum to discuss the 2003-2004 proposed parking regulation changes will be held April 24th from 3:30 to 4:30 unless completed sooner. The meeting will be held in the Big 12 room, K-State Student Union.

Changes Include:

- A wording change to make clear when parking is only allowed in lots specified by displayed permit.
- A wording change to make clear the refund policy.
- A change that does not allow retirees to have reserved stalls.
- A paragraph that allows the suspension of parking privileges for stealing permits, illegal disabled placards, etc., with appeals sent to the SGA Student Tribunal.
- A change in reserved stall rules, changing 10 hour stalls to 12 hours stalls, with intent of reducing 24 hour stalls. No fee increase is proposed with the change from 10 to 12 hour stalls, would occur with any other future fee increase.

Earth Week - K-State Recycles

Today, April 22, 2003, is Earth Day, and K-State Recycling invites all students, faculty, staff, and visitors to join in celebrating this year. Students for Environmental Action (SEA) have activities planned for all of Earth Week as follows:

TO THE POINT Zoning will best serve community if left unchanged

Manhattan is a college town, which makes a proposal to shift student housing in the Manhattan community difficult.

Ockert Fourie, city senior planner, said a change in resident zoning laws will reduce traffic intensity in residential areas, protect neighborhood character and create student housing close to campus.

However, these reasons do not justify placing students in one area of town.

Traffic is commonplace in Manhattan — it's a large university, so there will be an increased amount of traffic flow throughout neighborhoods.

Rezoning the residential areas will not protect neighborhood character because it undermines the unity between students and community members.

There already are residential areas close to campus. Students can choose to live there, or live far away, depending on their needs.

Also, students should not be treated as if they are all the same. Some have parties, and others have families of their own. They should be able to choose what area is best for them.

Making these zone changes will not solve the city's residential problems. It will add to them and increase the division between students and other city residents.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Columnist answers readers' questions, addresses concerns about teaching

I get a lot of letters about my not-so-traditional columns. Rarely, though, do I take the time to answer a reader's questions. But this week, I thought I would share some of the mail I get from readers and also take the time to respond.

Note: these are real submissions. Names have been withheld to respect the privacy of my loyal fans. Spell check was not run to ensure that the caliber of letters was apparent to readers.

Hey, Paul. How can u be such a jerk all the time?

It is rather easy. It actually is more difficult to not offend someone than it is to offend a person. With that in mind, I made my life easier by choosing the latter technique when writing my columns. It is not on purpose, but I do not go out of my way to please readers. (Please read the "He's a Wanksta" column and "Lent not just time to improve self.")

Yo, Restivo. Do u have a Micheal Jaxson fetish?

Most definitely. There is just something about a white woman who used to be a black man that really rubs me the right way. And to be able to live in Neverland, write songs in trees, and play with my monkey, Bubbles — who could ask for a better life? (Please read "Black, white or just weird, Jackson remains King of Pop.")

So ur an education major. I seriously think you should get out of the field. And could u please tell me where u plan 2 teach? Cuz I want to make sure my kids don't go there.

As a matter of fact, I probably will be teaching in the Kansas City area — Olathe, Blue Springs, Independence, one of those. I think, perhaps, that you may be threatened that there is a teacher out there who is going to raise the bar just a bit and not necessarily conform to the status quo. I will be the best gall darn teacher that ever walked the face of the Earth, and whoever says otherwise doesn't know a good teacher from a Piper school board member. (Please read "Education curriculum fails to make content meaningful.")

You frequently mention you have a girlfriend. Who is she, and why is she still with you?

Oh boy, am I glad to talk about Princess Sarah. That is her name and she is not to be called otherwise. Sarah and I will be dating for six years minus two months (Please read "Past relationship causes irrational behavior, thoughts.") Sarah is fortunate to not be abreast of the never-ending cycle of Fourum comments concerning me, nor is she abreast of anything that I do in Manhattan while she is in Kansas City. But I must say, she does have fine breasts.

Do you masturbate, Paul?

It is a fact that 92 percent of males masturbate, and 62 percent of females masturbate, according to a Kinsey Institute study of sexual behaviors. If this is true, more than 10,000 dudes shake hands with Rumpel Foreskin at K-State. (Please read "Peaceful Pleasures.") Let us now pause in silence to think about this glorious statistic.

I really appreciate the opportunity to be able to respond to such genuine concerns (as well as the opportunity to plug my own columns — you can read them at www.kstatecollegian.com.) Never does reading feedback from my fans become tiresome. Never do I take offense to such blatant claims and accusations regarding my character.

I find a certain inner peace in knowing that I can ramble on for 600-plus words and still maintain an audience, while in the meantime manage to offend every living soul at this university.

Yet you continue to read. It is like a bad habit. Something so great, yet so naughty.

Kind of like masturbation.

Abuse, neglect jeopardize futures of children

A tired and overworked mother bristles past her supervisor. She is not in the mood to endure his overly sexual antics before leaving for the day. As she buckles the seat belt in her four-door sedan, she notices a young woman soliciting magazine subscriptions coming toward her vehicle. The mother hurriedly speeds from the overcrowded parking lot. She is also not in the mood to endure the young woman's pushy salesperson antics.

While attempting to drive defensively, the mother remembers that she did not set anything out for dinner. Her husband is going to be furious, and her two small children are going to be a pain. She is not in the mood to endure any attitudes from any of them. She decides to risk her family's disappointment and go home empty-handed instead of trying to maneuver through the mobs of people at the local grocery store. Maybe they will be pleased with the idea of ordering a pizza instead.

Once the mother arrives home, everything happens as she had expected. Her husband begins to complain loudly, the children are crying and whining incessantly. She is definitely not in the mood to endure anything but peace and quiet right now. In a fit of rage, the mother grumbles something under her breath and grabs one of the children by the arm.

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Administration for Children and Families, a 2001 report on child maltreatment reported that each week, CPS agencies receive more than 50,000 referrals alleging that children have been abused or neglected. More than two-thirds of these referrals were screened in by CPS agencies because they were deemed appropriate for investigation or assessment.

Nationally, 67.4 percent of all referrals (about 1,802,000) were screened in (also called reports) and 32.5 percent (about 870,000) were screened out.

The Web site also reported that the average number of investigations per investigation/assessment worker was 69 per year.

To clear up any misconceptions about maltreatment, the Web site defines it as children who experienced or who were at risk of experiencing abuse or neglect. During 2001, 57.2 percent of victims suffered neglect (including medical neglect), 18.6 percent were physically abused, and 9.6 percent were sexually abused. 26.6 percent of victims were associated with additional types of maltreatment.

Further statistical highlights revealed that children in the age group of birth to 3 years accounted for 27.7 percent of victims. Victimization percentages declined as age increased. Percentages of victims were similar for males and females (48.0 percent and 51.5 percent respectively). The sex for 0.5 percent of child victims was unknown or not reported. More than half of all victims were white (50.2 percent), one-quarter were black, and one-sixth (14.5 percent) were Hispanic American Indians and Alaska Natives accounted for 2 percent of victims, and Asian-Pacific Islanders accounted for 1.3 percent of victims.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Administration for Children and Families also exposed what can only be categorized as shocking truths:

— Women comprised 59.3 percent of all perpetrators, while men comprised 40.7 percent. Female perpetrators were typically younger than male perpetrators — 42.3 percent of females compared to 31.9 percent of males were younger than 30 years old.

— A child was most likely to be victimized by his or her mother (40.5 percent). One "parent," acting alone, accounted for 80.9 percent of all perpetrators.

Nationally, an estimated 1,300 children died of abuse or neglect — a rate of 1.81 children per 100,000 children in the population and children younger than 1-year-old account for 40.9 percent of fatalities, and 84.4 percent were younger than six.

Nationally, an estimated 903,000 children were victims of abuse and neglect in 2001.

In honor of April being National Child Abuse and Neglect Awareness Month, I humbly ask, what are you doing to protect our future?

Proposed zoning changes may affect housing

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Possible changes in zoning laws could change the makeup of the Manhattan community.

Certain areas in Manhattan are under review for a change to their zoning laws, which would allow different types of residences to be built, Ockert Fourie, senior planner for Manhattan, said.

The area south of Poyntz Avenue near City Park would be down-zoned, restricting the number of non-related people that could live in the same building. The area east of campus — roughly bounded by Claflin Avenue to the north, Osage Street to the south, and North Manhattan and Juliette avenues on the west and east — would be up-zoned, which would allow for larger apartment buildings.

The purpose behind the changes, Fourie said, is to reduce the traffic intensity in residential areas, protect neighborhood character and create student housing close to campus.

The project is divided into two plans: the Traditional Neighborhood Overlay, in the City Park area, and the Multi-Family Rehabilitation Overlay east of campus.

The first phase of the TNO plan is tentatively scheduled for discussion at the May 6 City Commission meeting, while the M-FRO is still being discussed by the Planning Board, Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

Marilyn Caldwell, treasurer of the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance, was one of the leaders in introducing the zoning changes.

She said the idea came after she bought a house in the neighborhood east of campus. Problems with the wiring and the furnace immediately arose, she said.

By instituting the changes in zoning laws, Caldwell said students will have better housing because new apartments would be taken care of by owners.

"Also, I have to admit," she said, "I am a preservationist — I like to see old houses come back to life."

The idea behind down-zoning the houses near City Park, Caldwell said, is that middle-class families will begin buying the homes. Because several unrelated students would no longer be allowed to live in the houses, residents who intend to stay longer would buy the houses and invest more time and money to improving them.

If the new zoning laws take effect, Fourie said, they will neither affect current residents nor current buildings. Only new construction would be affected by the changes.

In the M-FRO district east of campus, Fourie said, future developments probably would include larger apartment buildings and complexes. Interest has been shown in developing the area by both local and national developers, he said.

"I don't think it will affect housing prices in any way," Fourie said. "It will create stability so families can move back into the area and create some additional, better-quality housing close to campus."

Caldwell, however, said she expects the price of housing in the TNO area to drop if the zoning changes are implemented. She said the price of housing in Manhattan has been artificially inflated because of the high demand from students.

Fourie said he agreed many students were paying high rent for low-quality housing, and further development would create more housing options close to campus.

The most important thing in making zoning decisions, Fourie said, is to try to ensure all parties are satisfied.

"The big thing for us is trying to create a balance," he said. "We want to maintain the character of the neighborhoods and provide affordable housing for students and residents."

get more operating money in departmental OOE accounts — the nuts and bolts for student instruction — and student enhancements we've been working on with student leadership."

O'Hara said $2 million of the generated revenue will go toward student enhancements allocated through Student Senate, while $2.7 million will be allocated for student financial aid, and $1.8 million will be marked for cost-of-living adjustments and inflation. He said there also will be a $2 million cushion in the event state legislators cut more education funds later this spring.

"Ideally, we won't have to use that money toward fulfilling the state's shortfall," he said. "Whatever money is left is supposed to go toward targeted excellence programs identified by Provost."

Coffman said administrators are waiting to see if state legislators will make more cuts this spring.

"We're watching that with intense interest," he said. "Legislative leadership and the governor are certainly working to avoid more cuts, and we're extraordinarily grateful for that. Right now, though, we're waiting for the official consensus revenue estimate for next fiscal year."

Although officials have an-icipated an increase in tuition, the actual proposal wasn't set until this academic year, O'Hara said. He said that after Student Senate makes its recommendations to administration on Thursday, administration officials will send the proposed tuition increase to the Board of Regents.

"The proposal will be presented at the May Board of Regents' first reading, but won't be voted on until the June meeting," he said.

Coffman said the tuition increases are similar in public universities across the state.

"It's almost exactly the same as KU is discussing, at least if we understand their numbers right," he said. "The other four institutions are looking at something a little below this but haven't finalized proposals yet, but neither have we."

O'Hara said the proposed increases, in addition to a $12 increase in privilege fees, will have many students expecting to see enhancements.

"With class cancellations, larger class sizes and over 130 faculty positions vacated, students are looking to see enhancements," he said. "I definitely think next year we should see some more visual enhancements to help alleviate the struggle that we are paying more. We'll be paying more, but we'll be receiving more."

Southeast Missouri State (19-13) vs. K-State (12-25)

ARMS RACE

Pitching concerns shroud Cats' midweek series

By Dan Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Mike Clark named Andrew Ehling as the starter for tonight's 7 p.m. tilt with Southeast Missouri State late Monday, but Ehling won't have many expectations to live up to.

In fact, as the Wildcats (12-25) step away from Big 12 competition this week for a two-game set with the Indians (19-13) at Tointon Family Stadium, Clark is hoping for the bare minimum.

"You've got to get to the seventh inning. That's the job of a starting pitcher," Clark said Sunday after starter Sean Clancy threw 91 pitches through three innings to post K-State's only loss in a three-game series with Texas Tech.

Put simply, the Cats' starting pitching has been mediocre at best and horrible at worst.

Solid performances from Kevin Melcher and Jim Ripley began the Tech series, but K-State returned to form Sunday with Clancy on the bump.

The junior walked six and gave up three runs before leaving three batters on-base into the fourth inning. It could have been worse — Tech stranded six baserunners under Clancy's watch.

"A hit here and a hit there sandwiched around 1,600 walks is a bad combination,"

Going the distance

Coach Mike Clark says he needs his starting pitchers to get into the seventh inning for K-State to be successful. The Cats have done that only twice over the last 10 games, both wins.

pitching coach Mike Hensley said.

While Clancy's walk total wasn't quite that bad Sunday, Wildcat coaches aren't downplaying the effects of K-State's pitching struggles.

With a chance to move one step closer to a Big 12 tournament bid Sunday, pitching did the Cats in again.

"It was frustrating because the opportunity was there to get within two games of the Big 12 tournament, and we came out passive,"

Cat baseball soap opera continues tonight

The plot thickens at 7 tonight when K-State's soap opera baseball season continues against Southeast Missouri State at Tointon Family Stadium.

Cue the music and roll the credits.

Choose "Days of our Losses," "The Young and the Hopeless," "As the Ball Soars," "Wildcat Hospital" or "One Life to Live" — no matter which is your favorite, all have taken significant turns in the past week.

We'll start with "Days of our Losses." This show almost was canceled last weekend when K-State halted the school's longest losing streak in history at 16 games Friday against Texas Tech.

The Cats capped Zack Saunderson's two-run walk-off home run with a raucous celebration at home plate.

The way the party raged, it seemed Coach Mike Clark's crew hadn't won all season. To clarify, K-State had won before the losing streak — 10 games in fact, albeit not in a row.

Jim Ripley gave the Cats seven strong innings from the mound Saturday in a 5-1 win to further jeopardize the future of the show.

Never fear, though. "Days of our Losses" made a resounding return to the spring lineup Sunday with another

Wildcat setback, this one an 8-1 loss that might have begun another depressing streak.

On down the schedule, "The Young and the Hopeless" is in good position for a Daytime Emmy award. Its draw among America's college baseball batters is second only to "As the Ball Soars."

Both shows feature Wildcat pitchers doing what they've done best this season — giving up hits in bunches. On Sunday, the program drew a larger-than-usual audience.

Tech banged out 11 hits and scored eight runs while the Tointon Stadium crowd cheered louder for Royals updates than for the Wildcats.

Pitching coach Mike Hensley called Sunday's blunder "hard to watch," and who can blame him?

K-State's team ERA has soared to 7.12 after surrendering 17 runs over the weekend, the staff's opponent batting average stands at .326, and the Wildcats walked 14 Red Raiders in three games to make sure Tech had plenty of opportunities to rejuvenate the show's ratings.

Clark and company have related to no other soap better this season than "Wildcat Hospital."

Third baseman Ty Soto and outfielder Gabe Luttrell were admitted before

Women's golf struggles, sits in 5th at Big 12 Championships

If a round of golf were only 17 holes, the K-State women's golf team would be sitting pretty today heading into the second round of the Big 12 Championships.

Instead, the Cats struggled on the 18th hole Monday, shooting 4-over-par as a team on the finishing hole. K-State sits in fifth place after firing a 312 in the opening round in Columbia, Mo.

Coach Kristi Knight said she was pleased with the overall play of her team, but wished they could have finished stronger.

"It wasn't too bad of a day," she said. "But at the same time, we did leave a lot of shots out there. We didn't play 18 very well. We had four bogies on 18, so that's never good."

"It was a decent day," Knight said. "It was tough out there, with some tough hole locations, and the greens were quite a bit faster than they

Columbia was hit with a storm over the weekend, which made the 6,008-yard Country Club of Missouri even tougher for the players.

Missouri leads the tournament by three strokes over Texas. The Tigers shot a 304 in the first round, three strokes better than the Longhorns.

Sophomore Stephanie Limoges, who finished the day with a 5-over score of 77, led K-State. She sits in a five-way tie for 11th place.

"I'm proud of her," Knight said. "It's her first Big 12. She was very nervous this morning, and she just did a great job of keeping her composure. She played a solid round."

K-State had the first tee-time Monday, and Limoges had a lot of nervous feelings early, as she was the first player to tee-off.

Men's basketball | Cats sign prospect

Men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge announced Monday that Dramane Diarra has signed a National Letter of Intent with K-State.

Diarra is the sixth recruit signed by Wooldridge and his staff and joins a class already ranked by many recruiting analysts among the nation's best. Kansas State signed four high school seniors and a junior college sophomore during the early signing period in November.

A 6-foot-9, 230-pound native of Paris, France, Diarra was a two-year starter for coach Kevin Muff at Cloud County Community College in Concordia, Kan.

A second team All-Jayhawk Conference selection as a sophomore, Diarra averaged 15.7 points and 7.0 rebounds per game during 2002-03, ranking 16th in the league in both categories. He also blocked 1.6 shots per game during 2002-03, the seventh-best average in the Jayhawk Conference, and helped lead the T-Birds to a 19-14 record and a berth in the third round of the NJCAA Region 6 Tournament.

FINDING THE PERFECT FIT

Different body types showcased with various styles

By Rachel Krier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It can get really complicated. There is just so much to consider when buying a swimsuit, said Marla Day, extension associate specialist in textiles.

"There are so many things that come into play about a person's modesty," Day said. "How much skin they feel comfortable exposing, how much they want to reveal."

Sometimes it's a style issue. Other times it's size. Then there is color, pattern and fabric to consider. And that is without looking at the price tag.

"The key is trying on as many as possible and going with the one that you feel most comfortable in," said Jessica Vega, senior in apparel marketing and design.

In an attempt to lessen the frustration of purchasing that perfect swimsuit, or even just a comfortable one, here's some advice to consider.

Halter tops and fabric

Halter tops, with a strap around the waist and one across the neck, are good choices for pear-shaped girls because it gives the illusion of a fuller bust, said Vega.

"Halters tend to lift and push (the breasts)," Vega said, "while triangle tops tend to separate and pull."

Vega, who has experience helping girls find the right swimsuit as a sales associate at The Buckle, also said that short-cut bottoms are more slimming and help hide wider hips.

Along with style and cut of swimsuit, fabric and pattern need to be taken into consideration when purchasing a swimsuit. Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover, said girls with pear-shaped figures should look for bold colors and large patterns for their top pieces and more quiet, solid-colored for their bottom pieces. Also, look for top pieces made of textured fabric with sparkles, shine or crinkle, Day said.

Bra-cut tops and underwires

For bustier women, the main concern in a swimsuit is support.

"The more the top is cut like a bra, the more support and the more it fits that figure," Day said.

Day also said there are several top styles that offer more support than the string bikini. Finding that swimsuit with more support in the bust line is a matter of finding the right manufacturer. Some are made that way, and others are not, Yeager said.

"If a woman is full, she doesn't need a larger size top — large means the width around your rib cage — she needs a fuller cup size," Yeager said. "They are manufactured like that."

Underwire swimsuits also add more support, Yeager said. If a woman wants to wear the triangle top bikini style, they do make some with a double band across the bottom for added support, she said.

String bikini and triangle tops

Women with small waists and medium cup sizes are good candidates for wearing the string bikini-triangle top swimsuits, Vega said. This style is the most popular this season, Vega said.

"When girls go out in the sun, they want to show more skin and get tanned," Vega said. "They feel cute

Caring for your suit

■ Rinse out swimsuit in cold water to remove excess chlorine or dirt between laundering.

■ Dry the suit as quickly as possible. Don't wring it out.

■ To avoid snagging the fabric on the suit bottom, always sit on a towel.

■ If seam lines begin to run, which is caused by the seams being strained, use a dab of the product Fray-Check to stop it.

and sexy in the bikini."

But even within the triangle top style, there are many varieties to choose from, Yeager said. Some show more space between the breasts while others are cut for more coverage. Some have built-in cups like a bra, some triangles are sewn in place to the bottom band, and others are adjustable, Yeager said.

The corresponding bottoms to triangle tops need to be considered as well, she said. Some are narrow-cut with minimal coverage in the back, some are high cut in the front with more hip exposure, and some are low-cut to show the most stomach.

In this case, the decision depends on personal preference — what aspects a person wants to accentuate and what aspects they want to cover more, Yeager said.

Full suits and tankinis

What used to be the only choice in women's swimming apparel, the one-piece full suit now tends to be the most rare style on the racks.

"Full suits definitely flatten women out," Yeager said. "They look best on full busted women or when the suits have some sort of detail or design aspect, like gathered fabric in the front or crisscrossed straps in the back."

One-piece suits do offer additional coverage for the more modest, but another alternative is the tankini top that leaves a small portion of the stomach exposed. The tankini also fits well on women with longer torsos because the tops tend to make short women look even shorter, Yeager said.

Size isn't only factor in choosing bra; shape, style play important role

For support, for coverage, for comfort, for sex appeal, for modesty or for exposure: the bra serves a variety of purposes for all sorts of women and their breasts.

"You have to consider the personal wish of the woman wearing the bra," Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover, said. "Some women will want a sexy bra today and a plain one tomorrow."

Personal preference, size, shape and style are the aspects that come into play when bra shopping, Yeager said.

First, there are the basic measurements: cup size and chest size. The cup size, which is represented by letters of the alphabet, measures how wide the breast is from side to side. And the chest size is the measurement around a woman's rib cage, represented by numbers. Sounds simple enough, except the breasts have more than just two measurements, Yeager said.

"Bras are like shoes," Yeager said. "You might be a size seven, and there are 40 pairs on the rack that are size seven, but less than half will fit your feet. It's because your feet have more than two measurements, and so does your bust."

The most common mistake women make with their bras is wearing one that's too big around the rib cage and too small in cup size, which does not offer sufficient support, Yeager said.

The symptom of this error is the bra sliding too high up the back and the woman constantly having to pull it down again. This is a rather simple problem to solve because it's a matter of changing measurements, just go up a letter in cup size and down in numbers on the rib cage size.

However, not all problems with the bra are so easily solved because they pertain more to style and shape rather than just size. Breasts cannot be described just in terms of big, small or medium, but also as firm or soft, pointed or rounded, perky or not and together or separate.

"It takes a while to find the right bra — the one that's comfortable, of good quality and looks good," said Lindsay Fair, senior in psychology and journalism and mass communication. "When you find the bra with all those qualities, you often want to stick to that particular kind. You just need to try different styles in different stores to find it."

Fair said she's been buying her bras from Victoria's Secret lately, but previously tried many other stores. For her, the comfort and quality are worth the extra expense.

"Now that I've found a bra that is comfortable and makes me look fuller, I wear a bra more often," Fair said. "But before, I went without a bra all the time because I couldn't find a bra that was comfortable. Now it's a win-win situation."

Fair is not alone in ranking comfort as a top priority in bras. Emily Petersen, junior in kinesiology, also said she chooses a bra based on comfort, and style is an added bonus.

"It's for you and not anyone else, so make it comfortable," Petersen said. "(It depends) if they fit nice, and fun colors are always good."

Although some women would say bras are uncomfortable items of clothing as a rule, Yeager said it is very possible to find a comfortable bra, and if not, the discomfort is usually minimal and worth the added confidence.

"Confidence is everything," Yeager said. "It radiates in your personality and in creating yourself. My whole job is helping women feel good about themselves."

Paul McCartney pushes for ban

Paul McCartney is calling for a ban on cluster bombs because of the harm they cause to civilians.

"It would be great to outlaw these cowardly weapons," the former Beatle told British Broadcasting Corp. radio on Monday. "What happens after the war finishes is that it's the civilians — mainly women and children — who get blown up."

Cluster munitions dropped by U.S. and British aircraft in Iraq contain hundreds of small "bomblets" which sometimes fail to explode until years later.

Friends' characters auction recliners

The characters on NBC's "Friends" love their recliners — and now, the actors who play them have designed their own chairs.

Aniston, Cox, Kudrow, LeBlanc, Perry and Schwimmer created recliners for La-Z-Boy, which will be auctioned off on eBay to benefit the Elizabeth Glaser Pediatric AIDS Foundation.

The chairs will be auctioned online from May 12-22.

KAHLER | Family uses faith to help cope with student's death

"He had such care and concern for how everyone in his class was coming along. He was always attentive to detail," she said. "I will miss Josh's compassion and sense of humor. Most of all, I will miss his smile."

Jen Lehr, Kahler's sister, said despite her sadness, her faith in God remains strong.

"It's hard to imagine the pain and struggle that caused him to take his own life," she said. "Only God knows those answers."

Lehr, also a K-State student, said the past few weeks were a trying time in Kahler's life as he felt God was not as close to him and desired God to have a more active role in his life.

"Josh is with God," she said. "All his questions are answered, he has no more doubts, and his soul is at rest. That's all that counts."

and there's nobody around," Knight said. "Except maybe a mom or dad or two. Today, she was the first player to hit a ball at the 2003 Big 12 Championship. The first tee, you get your name introduced, and there was about 20 or 30 people standing around, and she just bombed it."

The second round begins at 8 a.m. today. Knight said she fully expects K-State to play a solid round.

"All of the girls fought hard this morning," Knight said. "I'm proud of their effort. They didn't get frustrated, and I didn't see any big numbers."

"Hopefully, they'll be a little more comfortable on the golf course tomorrow, and with the greens," she said. "Hopefully we'll go out and have a better day tomorrow."

PITCHING | Wildcats search for consistency to turn streak around

Clark said. "There's just no excuse for that."

Instead, K-State's first two conference wins in 2003 only could move the Cats into a ninth-place tie with Oklahoma in the Big 12. The Sooners and K-State (2-13) share identical conference records, but only the league's top eight teams will advance to the conference tournament, May 21-25 in Oklahoma City.

While tonight's game won't figure into that mix, the game holds significance nonetheless for a Wildcat bunch still searching for consistency.

"We've got to go out, be aggressive and play good baseball," Clark said. "We can't squelch any games. We can't just show up for anybody. Every game's important from this point on."

This week's nonconference games might have added significance given the difficulty of K-State's remaining league contests. The Cats' itinerary is dotted with tough trips to Big 12 co-leader Texas and Baylor in the next two weeks, and any extra momentum would be beneficial.

For now, though, K-State's focus shifts to the Ohio Valley Conference. Southeast showed its penchant for offense Saturday in a 22-9 win over Eastern Illinois.

Outfielder Brian Hopkins pushed his team-leading home run tally to nine with two against the Panthers, and the Indians set season highs with 48 at bats, 22 runs, 23 hits, 18 RBI, five home runs and 40 total bases.

"They play a lot of good teams throughout the year, and they're going to be ready to play Tuesday night," Hensley said. "As far as some of our pitchers that didn't get an opportunity this weekend to learn from falling behind in the count, hopefully they've had an opportunity to see how that weekend went."

SAGA | Soap-opera theme is relevant for K-State baseball team last weekend. Both have broken wrists, and neither will return this season.

Outfielder Brad Anzman got a doctor's note too, after getting drilled in the noggin with a warmup toss from former Wildcat Nick Sorensen before Friday's contest.

Sorensen, who was on hand for the entire Tech series, donned a Hawaiian shirt after each of K-State's weekend wins to try to keep the streak alive.

It couldn't hurt I guess, but like the Cats' luck, the shirt's magic wore off Sunday.

Nobody likes to watch "One Life to Live," but this show is like reality TV for K-State.

A return trip to the Big 12 Tournament looks like a stretch now as the Cats hobble to the finish line. Each conference loss from here on out drops K-State further into the league cellar.

In 17 years, Clark has never coached through a 16-game losing streak. He only once finished last in the Big 12. That season, the Cats had five wins. This season, the Cats have two with 12 games left.

So once again, cue the music and tune in tonight to see how things shake out.

Letter calls for action

Commission urges governor to examine budget

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Commission was fed up — and its members took action.

Riley County Commissioners Alvan Johnson, Michael Kearns and Bob Newsome sent a letter to the governor, Kansas Legislature and 104 other county commissions in Kansas.

The letter called for cooperation and action by the Legislature and the governor regarding the budget deficit.

Counties and cities across Kansas are facing and dealing with budget problems, but are handling them, Newsome said. The state has stalled in its duty.

"We're saying, 'Hey, get on the ball and do your job,'" he said.

"Everyone is making it work except the great governor and the great Legislature."

The Commission sent the letter on Monday, calling for all county commissions in the state to do the same. The letter states the Commission's insistence that the Legislature tackle the budget issue as soon as possible.

"We believe it is time for both the Governor and the Legislators to stop playing games that are actually attempts by one political party to blame the other for raising taxes or cutting services," the commissioners said in their letter.

"It is also time to stop trying

Ashleigh Banfield
NEWS CORRESPONDENT

Ashleigh Banfield, host of "MSNBC Investigates" and an NBC News correspondent, will deliver a Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Banfield covered the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, reporting live for eight consecutive days at the World Trade Center in New York City. She then followed the story to the Middle East, reporting live from Afghanistan, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and Syria for the MSNBC primetime series, "A Region in Conflict," from September 2001 to July 2002.

"She has done some really interesting reporting from the Middle East," said Charles Reagan, chair of the Landon Lecture Series. "She is an international reporter who can share an interesting perspective on today's events."

Banfield also anchored live her own MSNBC news

Provost to step down

Coffman to take sabbatical, then return to Veterinary Medicine

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Provost James Coffman announced Tuesday that he will leave his position in July 2004.

Coffman, who has served as the university's chief academic officer for the past 16 years, will go on sabbatical leave for six months following the 2003-04 academic year, before he returns to a position in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"Dr. Jim Coffman has been an extraordinary academic vice president and provost for the past 16 years," President Jon Wefald said, according to a prepared statement.

"Indeed, I believe that Jim is not only one of the most outstanding chief academic officers in the history of Kansas State University, but he is quite clearly one of the best in America today."

Coffman, 64, said he felt it was simply the right time to step down.

"I think now is a time the transition can be made with minimal disruption," he said.

During his sabbatical, Coffman said he plans to work on a writing project he began last summer.

James Coffman
PROVOST

He is writing a book about conflict resolution and prevention in university settings, and hopes to finish it during his time off.

He also intends to refresh and catch up on the study of equine medicine, which was his specialty during his time as a professor and researcher.

His duties at the College of Veterinary Medicine still are not finalized, he said, but he is working with Dean Ralph Richardson to determine what role he will play when he returns.

He said he would like to return to equine medicine.

Coffman worked previously as the dean of the college, chair of the Department of Clinical Sciences and director of the Veterinary Medicine Teaching Hospital.

Prior to his work as an administrator, Coffman wrote more than 100 scientific papers and served as an editorial board member or editor of five journals.

He was president of the American College of Veterinary Internal Medicine in 1978-79, and of the American Association of Equine Practitioners in 1986. He also has served in many elected

ROTC class rides in Black Hawk helicopter

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was an early and windy morning for some Army ROTC cadets on Tuesday, but it was well worth it.

The students, who are in an elective ROTC class, were given the chance to fly in a Sikorsky S-70 Black Hawk helicopter as part of their class experience.

The students flew from the parking lot at Vanier Football Complex to Fort Riley, then flew around the military base.

Sgt. Jared Savage and CW-4 Dennis Weems flew the Black Hawk, and Spc. Brian Harvey rode along as a medic.

Savage said all of the cadets needed to wear hearing protection.

They also had to take off hats and make sure their uniform sleeves were rolled down.

Cameras were allowed, but if the students dropped them, they would not be able to reach down to get them, as their seatbelts restricted their movement.

Savage told the students they were going to fly at 1,000 feet to Fort Riley, which would take only about five minutes.

Once they arrived at the base, the helicopter could fly much lower.

Capt. Cathi Cherry, recruiting operations officer for K-State Army ROTC, said Black Hawks are utility helicopters.

"They are used to carry troops and equipment," she said.

"They can carry a heavy swing load, like a heavy artillery gun or even another helicopter."

Cherry said the purpose of the activity was to expose the students to army aviation.

"The students are afforded the opportunity to see what army aviation is about and take a ride in a Black Hawk," she said.

The students, freshmen and sophomores, are not in the military yet.

"They are not in the military until they get their degree," she said.

"They are training for their next job. When they finish their degree, they will become commissioned officers in the Army National Guard Reserves or active-duty Army."

Special measures had to be taken before the students were permitted to ride in the helicopter, Cherry said.

"The aircraft is part of the Army National Guard Aviation Battalion," she said.

"We had to coordinate the trip through the public affairs office in Topeka, where we basically went through each individual by name and Social Security number to have each of them approved to be able to fly."

Stephanie Swoboda, freshman in journalism and mass communications, said the helicopter ride was an incredible experience.

"It's an awesome opportunity for us to get a taste of the aviation branch of the Army," she said.

BANTER AND BELLOW

Columnists ponder growing old in body, mind; believe they have some self-control

Layton:

The telltale factor in getting too old is when you've lost control. In getting through life, you, as your own person, are the only thing you have the least bit of control over. This is especially true if you believe the world's events are systems of random chaos.

Honestly, I will know I've gotten too old when I have lost control. For example: when Godfather Corleone dies in the garden after he has given the power of the family to Michael. I simply ought to kick it for good when I've been turned out to pasture.

One could also interpret "losing control" as somebody losing grasp of physical power over their body. If I start to count my triple-bypass surgeries and heart attacks with tick marks on a chalkboard, it's time to turn out the lights.

Finding any fountain of youth is as pointless as thinking you're going to wake up and find yourself saved. Like hugging porcelain on your 21st birthday, getting old can make people have serious regrets. A friend of mine recently found happiness in knowing he doesn't have regrets. At 23, he claimed to have two-thirds of his life ahead of him to enjoy. At this point I was reminded of my own first one-third that just slipped away. Is the glass one-third empty or two-thirds full?

Cody ChesnuTT, singer-songwriter and super-fly pimp, once wrote, "Growing old makes us feel like getting older takes too much out of the day. Time is passing us by, none of us wants to die this way. It was only yesterday we were invincible ... we couldn't get enough of nothing."

So when I've lost control of either my mind or my head, I'm not just going to sit and watch myself wither. I'll stay curious as long I can. That is, of course, if I don't get hit by a bus first. But I don't have control over that ... well, not entirely.

Dana:

I used to think 60 was old. Even 50 sounded pretty darn close.

Now that certain relatives of mine are nearing — and have perhaps reached — those golden years, I can see that the platinum years rest in the extreme distant future.

Question:

How do you feel about the aging process?

You can e-mail Banter and Bellow columnists Dana Strongin, junior in print journalism, and Layton Elmke, senior in print journalism, at banter@pub.k-state.edu.

The pills, machines and surgical miracles of developed nations' medicine have blessed — and cursed — members of humanity with long lifespans.

That's why the saying is true: it's all in your head. People may develop aching joints and bald spots, but if they feel and act young, life's one long playdate.

When I'm "old," I'm definitely going to take advantage of it.

Imagine the possibilities: drinks on the rocks, purposely tacky outfits and pinching handsome men's buttocks, all in the name of senility.

Grandma Dana will be the coolest. She'll always have sweets on hand and pocket money to give the wee 'uns for their favorite childish libations.

You just have to wonder what those years will bring, though.

Will the music I love now sound goofy to young people? Or will those bands live on as classics similar in status to the Beatles or the Stones? Will people even know who the Beatles are? If not, I'll be sad.

What in the heck will teenage girls be wearing? Because there's not much skin left for them to expose. It's scary to see little girls baring their bellies. They probably don't even know what the word "midriff" means.

And finally, when will people stop making fun of those with pale legs? Creamy ivory skin was once an indication of wealth. I'd like that to come back in style.

These questions, friends, are why growing old is great. Sure, the world may seem rougher and too fast when you're gentler and slow-moving.

But somebody's gotta be around to see it. I know I'll be having a good, hearty laugh every step of the way.

Technology system to be integrated

By Stephani Edington
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's technology system as you know it will be phased out during the next few years.

It will be replaced with a system called LASER, which will integrate all the separate networking systems into one collaborative system.

Jennie Choi, consultant for business consulting services provider CellExchange, gave a preview on Tuesday in the Little Theatre of what the LASER - Legacy Application Systems Empowered Replacement - program would bring to K-State.

There are three separate applications, Choi said.

The first is a program for recruiters, contained on a handheld mobile device, she said. It will provide them instant access to schools they need to visit, highlighting the ones with the most recruiting potential and giving detailed information about potential students, including grades and intended majors.

The second program is for those in charge of enrollment. They will be able to track inquiries, admissions and enrollments and compare them with the goals set for each, Choi said.

The last program will be for K-State students. Students will be able to log onto one account containing all of their information pertaining to school, including a daily and course schedule, a personal progress report, grades, financial aid information and e-mail, as well as other personal dealings, she said.

President Jon Wefald said he is looking forward to the new system and what it will bring to K-State.

"We are going to implement a system that will elevate K-State to a new level of excellence," he said. "The end game is to become an even better university."

Provost James Coffman said the project has been a long time coming and has been subject to much debate.

"I think that it has really gelled into a concept that everyone is really excited about," he said.

Coffman addressed the problems with course schedules not always being convenient for students, and how the new program may be able to solve that. He said the need for flexibility is constantly going up.

"That will be met - not necessarily at a lower cost - but at far better productivity," he said.

That cost, Coffman said, will be about $15 million. K-State will buy the base software from Oracle Corporation. Then, it will tailor the program to fit the university's needs for student information and financial records, said Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology.

"Kansas State is moving from an old record-based computing system to a Web-based system to empower students, faculty and staff," she said.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the programs at K-State are in dire need of replacement.

The old systems lack in many areas, including adaptability, he said.

"The new system must be flexible enough to meet our needs at all levels," Rawson said.

Larry Moeder, director of admissions and student financial assistance, said the system will also make life more efficient for students.

"By housing all the data together, we'll be able to provide a better service to the students," he said.

"We can give the students exactly what they want, when they want it"

Kansas officials to attend parade to honor troops

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Patriotism is the word of the day today, as Congressman Jim Ryun and Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline will be in Manhattan to participate in a parade and rally to honor troops.

Mayor Mark Taussig said that both Ryun and Kline were asked to attend the event because of their patriotism.

"I think they are great Americans and great patriots," said Dick Miller, a retired military man and self-proclaimed "patriotic Manhattanite" who helped organize the event.

Miller said he has been Patriotic parade

The parade will begin at 5:30 p.m. and will proceed down Poyntz Avenue to City Park. Congressman Jim Ryun and Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline will also be in attendance.

working on the parade for about two weeks and said it is a great way to show support for the military.

"There have been plenty of protests and the people who believe in what the military are doing should get out there and show our support," he said.

The parade will begin at 5:30 p.m. and will proceed down Poyntz Avenue to City Park where a rally will occur on the Arts in the Park stage.

Taussig said Kline will deliver a speech and there will be several performances, including songs by the Little Apple Barbershop Chorus and a rendition of Lee Greenwood's "Proud To Be An American" performed by Manhattan resident John Richard.

Taussig said the community should get out and show support for not only the troops, but for military families as well.

"This is to show community appreciation to our troops and their families," he said. "They have made significant sacrifices, and we want to honor what they have done and express our appreciation."

Miller said the idea for the parade and rally came about when several community members were discussing the war in Iraq.

"We have just watched the American troops perform in such a professional way. We thought it was time to pay tribute to those who are doing such a good job," he said.

Taussig said the public is invited to attend and anyone who wants to show support should participate, especially veterans.

"We are encouraging veterans to wear their uniforms and show up to support as well," he said. "This is a chance to pick up your flag, dress in red, white and blue and join in."

TO THE POINT Landon lectures not convenient for all to attend

Students and faculty are fortunate to have the Landon Lecture Series, which invites engaging and knowledgeable speakers.

However, the series is not meeting its potential if students and faculty are not able to attend.

Landon lectures are presented at 10:30 a.m., a time when a vast majority of students and faculty are in class.

It does not make sense to offer a high-caliber lecture series like the Landon series at a time that is not compatible with the university community's schedule.

The lectures usually have significant turnouts, but professors should not be forced to cancel classes or alter lesson plans in the instance that students attend the lecture in lieu of class.

Instead, the lectures should be offered at a time that will not interfere with so many classes.

Professors and students should not be forced to choose between class and the lectures.

Planners of the lecture series say the time is convenient for speakers. It should be a duty of those involved to seek out speakers that will lecture to a more representative audience of the university at a time that accommodates more student and faculty.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

FORBIDDEN PLEASURE

Couples should think carefully before forgiving mates

A woman came home just in time to find her husband in bed with another woman.

With super-human strength borne of fury, she dragged her husband down the stairs to the garage and put his manhood in a vice.

She then secured it tightly and removed the handle.

Next she picked up a hacksaw.

The husband, terrified, screamed, "Stop! Stop! You're not going to cut it off, are you?"

The wife, with a gleam of revenge in her eye, said, "Nope. You are. I'm going to set the garage on fire" (www.lifeisajoke.com).

What would you do if you walked in on your mate cheating on you? It could happen.

According to

www.relationshipdirectory.com, 72 percent of men and 48 percent of women have admitted to being unfaithful in past relationships.

Can relationships survive a cheating partner?

Should mates be willing to forgive and forget when someone they could once trust crosses the line into infidelity?

Absolutely not.

God told Adam and Eve not to eat the forbidden fruit. Adam and Eve had every intention of not eating the fruit. Their lives were perfect, the garden was great, and they didn't even have to wear clothes. Enter the serpent. The tempting third party that made it look so good. Eve was tempted, ate the fruit, even shared it with Adam and voila they were tossed out of the beautiful garden.

Doing the forbidden can give men and women a sense of thrill. Temptation is tantalizing, and inhibiting the sinful tendency to do what you want and fulfill your desires can be excruciating.

There are different degrees and classifications of cheating. Cheating is not as much defined by the nature of the physical act as it is defined by the intentions of the cheater.

For instance, if you have been dating for two months and your significant other gets tanked and kisses someone on a dare, there is hope for the survival of the relationship.

However, if a spouse has been married for 10 years, has three children and is sleeping with the secretary, he or she can be defined as a complete and total scum bag.

Aside from emotionally wrecking a relationship, cheating can bring dangerous repercussions upon an unsuspecting partner. Sexually transmitted diseases and a potentially psychotic lover on the side is an unfair danger to your mate.

Then there is the trust issue. Even if your mate chooses to forgive and forget (which usually is asking for it), they have to wonder if it is going to happen again. This can lead to constant nagging and long explanations of where you are going, who you are going with, and exactly what time you are going to walk in the front door.

This constant nitpicking makes you want to cheat even more, and the cycle continues.

When you get beyond the excuses from a cheating mate – I was drunk, I don't know why I did it, he/she was all over me, I feel like you have been neglecting me – the real reason often uncovers a problem in the relationship. It could be emotionally, physically or both.

When couples decide to work through infidelity for the sake of children, pets or a shared lease, they need to look at the underlying problems in their relationship. Cheating doesn't just happen, no matter what your mate told you. If cheating does occur, a vigilant analysis of the relationship should take place if you think it is possible to work past it.

Interesting Internet sites provide numerous diversions

It's that time.

Yes, it is once again time to neglect academic work and enjoy the beauty of the great outdoors. Or, if you're like me, stay indoors wishing you could justify going outdoors.

But you have a ton of work to do, so instead of going outside, you stay in the library and get distracted by the Internet instead.

I am very good at getting distracted by Web sites. I could do it with my eyes closed and my hands behind my back on a computer with an antiquated 14.4Kbps modem. In short, I am an expert.

Here are three of the best Web sites for wasting oodles of time that you should be spending on final projects and papers. Please note that I do not necessarily endorse the sites' content or the views expressed by their authors.

Site: www.fark.com

"Pokey the Penguin" is an intriguing – and often confusing – non-sequitur comic strip. Its unorthodox, minimalist art belies the intellectual depth of its writing. It is the work of a genius, a madman or a precocious 6-year-old.

The strip is populated by such odd characters as the Skeptopotamus, a snowman named Mr. Nutty and a number of identical cut-and-paste penguins. It deals with historical, social, artistic and philosophical problems in a way that makes you go, "Huh?"

Note that not everyone thinks this comic is funny. Its humor lies in implication, and not in overt, "Garfield"-style jokes. If you don't like to work for your humor, you can afford to give this strip a miss.

Viewer discretion: There is very little material that could be considered offensive in this comic. There are some mentions of nationality – the penguins seem convinced that Italians are evil incarnate – but other than those, there are no racial slurs or racist language.

Time-wasting capability: Moderate. There are 430 strips. This provides a supply of mind-bending non-sequitur humor, but the site is not updated frequently.

Site: www.fark.com

This is the mother of all time-wasting Web sites. It features a daily supply of wacky and off-beat news stories and contests for altering images with Adobe Photoshop.

Beware the infamous FARK.com thinline next to stories – these discussion threads can contain vicious flame wars.

Viewer discretion: FARK sometimes features links to porn. If this offends you, do not click on the Not Safe For Work (NSFW) links.

Time-wasting capability: High. The irreverent FARK headlines are mostly amusing, and the site's constant updates provide an enormous amount of variety and new content. As an added bonus, the news items keep FARKers informed of important news items.

Site: www.homestarrunner.com

This is a hilarious site with animated features and games for the whole family. The multimedia content is centered on the antics of the animated protagonist Homestarrunner and his friends.

Characters like Strong Bad, the King of Town and The Cheat make Homestarrunner's world complete. The way they interact is fascinating, and their values are equally intriguing. More importantly, however, they're funnier than an enormous wad of clown monkeys.

Viewer discretion: This site contains no objectionable content other than a little bit of cartoon violence and some practical jokes.

Time-wasting capability: Enormous. There are literally hours of Flash animation on the site, and there are new animations every week. One of the most popular features is Strong Bad's weekly e-mail. If you never look at anything else on the site, check out Strong Bad's advice on English papers: www.homestarrunner.com/sbemail64.html.

In addition, the animated games are simply addictive. You will never get anything productive done again if you get sucked into this site.

I hope these sites will help you forget the immense pain you will endure during finals week. If not, at least you'll have fun, right?

Remember: It's always darkest before dawn.

Low student turnout at Landon lectures discussed

Officials say time right for speakers' travel

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There has been some debate over what is causing low student turnout at Landon lectures.

Zac Cook, former student body president, said that because most Landon lectures are at 10:30 a.m., students cannot attend because the lecture time conflicts with two class times.

He said that because Tuesday and Thursday classes are usually an hour and 15 minutes, students in both 9:30 a.m. and 11:05 a.m. classes can't attend because of schedule conflicts.

"So, basically, no one gets to go because there's a good chance that a lot of people have class at that time," he said.

Cook said one solution other than rescheduling the lectures would be for professors to cancel classes to allow students to attend the lectures. However, he said not all students would take advantage of the class cancellation to go to the lecture, so professors aren't likely to want to cancel classes.

Charles Reagan, chair of the Landon Lecture Series, disagreed that conflicting class schedules were the cause of low student turnout at the lectures.

"I talked to the facilities department, and the total number of seats in every classroom and lab at K-State is only 10,000," he said. "So if every seat was filled at 10:30 a.m., there would still be 8,000 undergraduates that are not in class at that time."

Reagan said he understood that class conflicts might keep some students from attending. However, he said he expected that when a professional journalist such as Ashleigh Banfield speaks at K-State, journalism classes would go, or journalism professors would encourage students to attend by offering extra credit.

"When the speaker is germane to a curriculum, students in that field should show up in force," he said.

Reagan said that although lectures aren't always scheduled for 10:30 a.m., most of them are for several reasons.

He said this time is most convenient in terms of transportation for the speakers.

"We usually bring them in the night before and want to get them back to New York or Washington, D.C. by dinner time of the day they lecture," he said. "They just won't come if they have to spend two nights."

Reagan said the 10:30 a.m. lecture times are also best in terms of getting coverage for the events.

Although initial discussions about low student turnout took place when Cook was still in office, the discussion now has been turned over to Student Body President John O'Hara.
